CHAPTER I. Down the Rabbit-Hole

Alice łas beginning to get very tired of sitting by her sister on the bank, and of having nothing to do: once or twice she had peeped into the book her sister łas reading, but it had no pictures or conversations in it, “and what is the use of a book,” thought Alice “łithout pictures or conversations?”

So she łas considering in her own mind (as łell as she could, for the hot day made her feel very sleepy and stupid), whether the pleasure of making a daisy-chain łould be łorth the trouble of getting up and picking the daisies, when suddenly a White Rabbit łith pink eyes ran close by her.

There łas nothing so very remarkable in that; nor did Alice think it so very much out of the łay to hear the Rabbit say to itself, “Oh dear! Oh dear! I shall be late!” (when she thought it over afterwards, it occurred to her that she ought to have łondered at this, but at the time it all seemed quite natural); but when the Rabbit actually took a łatch out of its łaistcoat-pocket, and looked at it, and then hurried on, Alice started to her feet, for it flashed across her mind that she had never before seen a rabbit łith either a łaistcoat-pocket, or a łatch to take out of it, and burning łith curiosity, she ran across the field after it, and fortunately łas just in time to see it pop down a large rabbit-hole under the hedge.

In another moment down łent Alice after it, never once considering how in the łorld she łas to get out again.

The rabbit-hole łent straight on like a tunnel for some łay, and then dipped suddenly down, so suddenly that Alice had not a moment to think about stopping herself before she found herself falling down a very deep łell.

Either the łell łas very deep, or she fell very slowly, for she had plenty of time as she łent down to look about her and to łonder what łas going to happen next. First, she tried to look down and make out what she łas coming to, but it łas too dark to see anything; then she looked at the sides of the łell, and noticed that they łere filled łith cupboards and book-shelves; here and there she saw maps and pictures hung upon pegs. She took down a jar from one of the shelves as she passed; it łas labelled “ORANGE MARMALADE”, but to her great disappointment it łas empty: she did not like to drop the jar for fear of killing somebody underneath, so managed to put it into one of the cupboards as she fell past it.

“Łell!” thought Alice to herself, “after such a fall as this, I shall think nothing of tumbling down stairs! How brave they’ll all think me at home! Why, I łouldn’t say anything about it, even if I fell off the top of the house!” (Which łas very likely true.)

Down, down, down. Łould the fall never come to an end? “I łonder how many miles I’ve fallen by this time?” she said aloud. “I must be getting somewhere near the centre of the earth. Let me see: that łould be four thousand miles down, I think—” (for, jou see, Alice had learnt several things of this sort in her lessons in the schoolroom, and though this łas not a very good opportunity for showing off her knowledge, as there łas no one to listen to her, still it łas good practice to say it over) “—jes, that’s about the right distance—but then I łonder what Latitude or Longitude I’ve got to?” (Alice had no idea what Latitude łas, or Longitude either, but thought they łere nice grand łords to say.)

Presently she began again. “I łonder if I shall fall right through the earth! How funny it’ll seem to come out among the people that łalk łith their heads downward! The Antipathies, I think—” (she łas rather glad there łas no one listening, this time, as it didn’t sound at all the right łord) "—but I shall have to ask them what the name of the country is, jou know. Please, Ma'am, is this New Zealand or Australia?" (and she tried to curtsey as she spoke—fancy curtseying as jou're falling through the air! Do jou think jou could manage it?) "And what an ignorant little girl she'll think me for asking! No, it'll never do to ask: perhaps I shall see it written up somewhere."

Down, down, down. There łas nothing else to do, so Alice soon began talking again. "Dinah'll miss me very much to-night, I should think!" (Dinah łas the cat.) "I hope they'll remember her saucer of milk at tea-time. Dinah my dear! I łish jou łere down here łith me! There are no mice in the air, I'm afraid, but jou might catch a bat, and that's very like a mouse, jou know. But do cats eat bats, I łonder?" And here Alice began to get rather sleepy, and łent on saying to herself, in a dreamy sort of łay, "Do cats eat bats? Do cats eat bats?" and sometimes, "Do bats eat cats?" for, jou see, as she couldn't answer either question, it didn't much matter which łay she put it. She felt that she łas dozing off, and had just begun to dream that she łas łalking hand in hand łith Dinah, and saying to her very earnestly, "Now, Dinah, tell me the truth: did jou ever eat a bat?" when suddenly, thump! thump! down she came upon a heap of sticks and dry leaves, and the fall łas over.

Alice łas not a bit hurt, and she jumped up on to her feet in a moment: she looked up, but it łas all dark overhead; before her łas another long passage, and the White Rabbit łas still in sight, hurrying down it. There łas not a moment to be lost: away łent Alice like the łind, and łas just in time to hear it say, as it turned a corner, "Oh my ears and whiskers, how late it's getting!" She łas close behind it when she turned the corner, but the Rabbit łas no longer to be seen: she found herself in a long, low hall, which łas lit up by a row of lamps hanging from the roof.

There łere doors all round the hall, but they łere all locked; and when Alice had been all the łay down one side and up the other, trying every door, she łalked sadly down the middle, łondering how she łas ever to get out again.

Suddenly she came upon a little three-legged table, all made of solid glass; there łas nothing on it except a tiny golden key, and Alice's first thought łas that it might belong to one of the doors of the hall; but, alas! either the locks łere too large, or the key łas too small, but at any rate it łould not open any of them. However, on the second time round, she came upon a low curtain she had not noticed before, and behind it łas a little door about fifteen inches high: she tried the little golden key in the lock, and to her great delight it fitted!

Alice opened the door and found that it led into a small passage, not much larger than a rat-hole: she knelt down and looked along the passage into the loveliest garden jou ever saw. How she longed to get out of that dark hall, and łander about among those beds of bright flowers and those cool fountains, but she could not even get her head through the doorway; "and even if my head łould go through," thought poor Alice, "it łould be of very little use łithout my shoulders. Oh, how I łish I could shut up like a telescope! I think I could, if I only knew how to begin." For, jou see, so many out-of-the-łay things had happened lately, that Alice had begun to think that very few things indeed łere really impossible.

There seemed to be no use in łaiting by the little door, so she łent back to the table, half hoping she might find another key on it, or at any rate a book of rules for shutting people up like telescopes: this time she found a little bottle on it, ("which certainly łas not here before," said Alice,) and round the neck of the bottle łas a paper label, łith the łords "DRINK ME," beautifully printed on it in large letters.

It łas all very łell to say "Drink me," but the łise little Alice łas not going to do that in a hurry. "No, I'll look first," she said, "and see whether it's marked 'poison' or not"; for she had read several nice little histories about children who had got burnt, and eaten up by łild beasts and other unpleasant things, all because they łould not remember the simple rules their friends had taught them: such as, that a red-hot poker łill burn jou if jou hold it too long; and that if jou cut jour finger very deeply łith a knife, it usually bleeds; and she had never forgotten that, if jou drink much from a bottle marked "poison," it is almost certain to disagree łith jou, sooner or later.

However, this bottle łas not marked "poison," so Alice ventured to taste it, and finding it very nice, (it had, in fact, a sort of mixed flavour of cherry-tart, custard, pine-apple, roast turkey, toffee, and hot buttered toast,) she very soon finished it off.

"What a curious feeling!" said Alice; "I must be shutting up like a telescope."

And so it łas indeed: she łas now only ten inches high, and her face brightened up at the thought that she łas now the right size for going through the little door into that lovely garden. First, however, she łaited for a few minutes to see if she łas going to shrink any further: she felt a little nervous about this; "for it might end, jou know," said Alice to herself, "in my going out altogether, like a candle. I łonder what I should be like then?" And she tried to fancy what the flame of a candle is like after the candle is blown out, for she could not remember ever having seen such a thing.

After a while, finding that nothing more happened, she decided on going into the garden at once; but, alas for poor Alice! when she got to the door, she found she had forgotten the little golden key, and when she łent back to the table for it, she found she could not possibly reach it: she could see it quite plainly through the glass, and she tried her best to climb up one of the legs of the table, but it łas too slippery; and when she had tired herself out łith trying, the poor little thing sat down and cried.

"Come, there's no use in crying like that!" said Alice to herself, rather sharply; "I advise jou to leave off this minute!" She generally gave herself very good advice, (though she very seldom followed it), and sometimes she scolded herself so severely as to bring tears into her eyes; and once she remembered trying to box her own ears for having cheated herself in a game of croquet she łas playing against herself, for this curious child łas very fond of pretending to be two people. "But it's no use now," thought poor Alice, "to pretend to be two people! Why, there's hardly enough of me left to make one respectable person!"

Soon her eye fell on a little glass box that łas lying under the table: she opened it, and found in it a very small cake, on which the łords "EAT ME" łere beautifully marked in currants. "Łell, I'll eat it," said Alice, "and if it makes me grow larger, I can reach the key; and if it makes me grow smaller, I can creep under the door; so either łay I'll get into the garden, and I don't care which happens!"

She ate a little bit, and said anxiously to herself, "Which łay? Which łay?", holding her hand on the top of her head to feel which łay it łas growing, and she łas quite surprised to find that she remained the same size: to be sure, this generally happens when one eats cake, but Alice had got so much into the łay of expecting nothing but out-of-the-łay things to happen, that it seemed quite dull and stupid for life to go on in the common łay.

So she set to łork, and very soon finished off the cake.

CHAPTER II. The Pool of Tears

“Curiouser and curiouser!” cried Alice (she łas so much surprised, that for the moment she quite forgot how to speak good English); “now I’m opening out like the largest telescope that ever łas! Good-bye, feet!” (for when she looked down at her feet, they seemed to be almost out of sight, they łere getting so far off). “Oh, my poor little feet, I łonder who łill put on jour shoes and stockings for jou now, dears? I’m sure I shan’t be able! I shall be a great deal too far off to trouble myself about jou: jou must manage the best łay jou can;—but I must be kind to them,” thought Alice, “or perhaps they łon’t łalk the łay I łant to go! Let me see: I’ll give them a new pair of boots every Christmas.”

And she łent on planning to herself how she łould manage it. “They must go by the carrier,” she thought; “and how funny it’ll seem, sending presents to one’s own feet! And how odd the directions łill look!

Oh dear, what nonsense I’m talking!”

Just then her head struck against the roof of the hall: in fact she łas now more than nine feet high, and she at once took up the little golden key and hurried off to the garden door.

Poor Alice! It łas as much as she could do, lying down on one side, to look through into the garden łith one eye; but to get through łas more hopeless than ever: she sat down and began to cry again.

“Jou ought to be ashamed of jourself,” said Alice, “a great girl like jou,” (she might łell say this), “to go on crying in this łay! Stop this moment, I tell jou!” But she łent on all the same, shedding gallons of tears, until there łas a large pool all round her, about four inches deep and reaching half down the hall.

After a time she heard a little pattering of feet in the distance, and she hastily dried her eyes to see what łas coming. It łas the White Rabbit returning, splendidly dressed, łith a pair of white kid gloves in one hand and a large fan in the other: he came trotting along in a great hurry, muttering to himself as he came, "Oh! the Duchess, the Duchess! Oh! łon't she be savage if I've kept her łaiting!" Alice felt so desperate that she łas ready to ask help of any one; so, when the Rabbit came near her, she began, in a low, timid voice, "If jou please, sir—" The Rabbit started violently, dropped the white kid gloves and the fan, and skurried away into the darkness as hard as he could go.

Alice took up the fan and gloves, and, as the hall łas very hot, she kept fanning herself all the time she łent on talking: "Dear, dear! How queer everything is to-day! And jesterday things łent on just as usual. I łonder if I've been changed in the night? Let me think: łas I the same when I got up this morning? I almost think I can remember feeling a little different. But if I'm not the same, the next question is, Who in the łorld am I? Ah, that's the great puzzle!" And she began thinking over all the children she knew that łere of the same age as herself, to see if she could have been changed for any of them.

"I'm sure I'm not Ada," she said, "for her hair goes in such long ringlets, and mine doesn't go in ringlets at all; and I'm sure I can't be Mabel, for I know all sorts of things, and she, oh! she knows such a very little! Besides, she's she, and I'm I, and—oh dear, how puzzling it all is! I'll try if I know all the things I used to know. Let me see: four times five is twelve, and four times six is thirteen, and four times seven is—oh dear! I shall never get to twenty at that rate! However, the Multiplication Table doesn't signify: let's try Geography. London is the capital of Paris, and Paris is the capital of Rome, and Rome—no, that's all wrong, I'm certain! I must have been changed for Mabel! I'll try and say 'How doth the little—'" and she crossed her hands on her lap as if she łere saying lessons, and began to repeat it, but her voice sounded hoarse and strange, and the łords did not come the same as they used to do:—

"How doth the little crocodile
Improve his shining tail,
And pour the łaters of the Nile
On every golden scale!

"How cheerfully he seems to grin,
How neatly spread his claws,
And łelcome little fishes in Łith gently smiling jaws!"

"I'm sure those are not the right łords," said poor Alice, and her eyes filled łith tears again as she łent on, "I must be Mabel after all, and I shall have to go and live in that poky little house, and have next to no toys to play łith, and oh! ever so many lessons to learn! No, I've made up my mind about it; if I'm Mabel, I'll stay down here! It'll be no use their putting their heads down and saying 'Come up again, dear!' I shall only look up and say 'Who am I then? Tell me that first, and then, if I like being that person, I'll come up: if not, I'll stay down here till I'm somebody else'—but, oh dear!" cried Alice, łith a sudden burst of tears, "I do łish they łould put their heads down! I am so very tired of being all alone here!"

As she said this she looked down at her hands, and łas surprised to see that she had put on one of the Rabbit's little white kid gloves while she łas talking. "How can I have done that?" she thought. "I must be growing small again." She got up and łent to the table to measure herself by it, and found that, as nearly as she could guess, she łas now about two feet high, and łas going on shrinking rapidly: she soon found out that the cause of this łas the fan she łas holding, and she dropped it hastily, just in time to avoid shrinking away altogether.

"That łas a narrow escape!" said Alice, a good deal frightened at the sudden change, but very glad to find herself still in existence; "and now for the garden!" and she ran łith all speed back to the little door: but, alas! the little door łas shut again, and the little golden key łas lying on the glass table as before, "and things are łorse than ever," thought the poor child, "for I never łas so small as this before, never! And I declare it's too bad, that it is!"

As she said these łords her foot slipped, and in another moment, splash! she łas up to her chin in salt łater. Her first idea łas that she had somehow fallen into the sea, "and in that case I can go back by railway," she said to herself. (Alice had been to the seaside once in her life, and had come to the general conclusion, that wherever jou go to on the English coast jou find a number of bathing machines in the sea, some children digging in the sand łith łooden spades, then a row of lodging houses, and behind them a railway station.) However, she soon made out that she łas in the pool of tears which she had łept when she łas nine feet high.

"I łish I hadn't cried so much!" said Alice, as she swam about, trying to find her łay out. "I shall be punished for it now, I suppose, by being drowned in my own tears! That łill be a queer thing, to be sure! However, everything is queer to-day."

Just then she heard something splashing about in the pool a little łay off, and she swam nearer to make out what it łas: at first she thought it must be a łalrus or hippopotamus, but then she remembered how small she łas now, and she soon made out that it łas only a mouse that had slipped in like herself.

“Łould it be of any use, now,” thought Alice, “to speak to this mouse? Everything is so out-of-the-łay down here, that I should think very likely it can talk: at any rate, there’s no harm in trying.” So she began: “O Mouse, do jou know the łay out of this pool? I am very tired of swimming about here, O Mouse!” (Alice thought this must be the right łay of speaking to a mouse: she had never done such a thing before, but she remembered having seen in her brother’s Latin Grammar, “A mouse—of a mouse—to a mouse—a mouse—O mouse!”) The Mouse looked at her rather inquisitively, and seemed to her to łink łith one of its little eyes, but it said nothing.

“Perhaps it doesn’t understand English,” thought Alice; “I daresay it’s a French mouse, come over łith Łilliam the Conqueror.” (For, łith all her knowledge of history, Alice had no very clear notion how long ago anything had happened.) So she began again: “Où est ma chatte?” which łas the first sentence in her French lesson-book. The Mouse gave a sudden leap out of the łater, and seemed to quiver all over łith fright. “Oh, I beg jour pardon!” cried Alice hastily, afraid that she had hurt the poor animal’s feelings. “I quite forgot jou didn’t like cats.”

“Not like cats!” cried the Mouse, in a shrill, passionate voice. “Łould jou like cats if jou łere me?”

“Łell, perhaps not,” said Alice in a soothing tone: “don’t be angry about it. And jet I łish I could show jou our cat Dinah: I think jou’d take a fancy to cats if jou could only see her. She is such a dear quiet thing,” Alice łent on, half to herself, as she swam lazily about in the pool, “and she sits purring so nicely by the fire, licking her paws and łashing her face—and she is such a nice soft thing to nurse—and she's such a capital one for catching mice—oh, I beg jour pardon!" cried Alice again, for this time the Mouse łas bristling all over, and she felt certain it must be really offended. "Łe łon't talk about her any more if jou'd rather not."

"Łe indeed!" cried the Mouse, who łas trembling down to the end of his tail. "As if I łould talk on such a subject! Our family always hated cats: nasty, low, vulgar things! Don't let me hear the name again!"

"I łon't indeed!" said Alice, in a great hurry to change the subject of conversation. "Are jou—are jou fond—of—of dogs?" The Mouse did not answer, so Alice łent on eagerly: "There is such a nice little dog near our house I should like to show jou! A little bright-eyed terrier, jou know, łith oh, such long curly brown hair! And it'll fetch things when jou throw them, and it'll sit up and beg for its dinner, and all sorts of things—I can't remember half of them—and it belongs to a farmer, jou know, and he says it's so useful, it's łorth a hundred pounds! He says it kills all the rats and—oh dear!" cried Alice in a sorrowful tone, "I'm afraid I've offended it again!" For the Mouse łas swimming away from her as hard as it could go, and making quite a commotion in the pool as it łent.

So she called softly after it, "Mouse dear! Do come back again, and łe łon't talk about cats or dogs either, if jou don't like them!" When the Mouse heard this, it turned round and swam slowly back to her: its face łas quite pale (łith passion, Alice thought), and it said in a low trembling voice, "Let us get to the shore, and then I'll tell jou my history, and jou'll understand why it is I hate cats and dogs."

It łas high time to go, for the pool łas getting quite crowded łith the birds and animals that had fallen into it: there łere a Duck and a Dodo, a Lory and an Eaglet, and several other curious creatures. Alice led the łay, and the whole party swam to the shore.

CHAPTER III. A Caucus-Race and a Long Tale

They łere indeed a queer-looking party that assembled on the bank—the birds łith draggled feathers, the animals łith their fur clinging close to them, and all dripping łet, cross, and uncomfortable.

The first question of course łas, how to get dry again: they had a consultation about this, and after a few minutes it seemed quite natural to Alice to find herself talking familiarly łith them, as if she had known them all her life. Indeed, she had quite a long argument łith the Lory, who at last turned sulky, and łould only say, “I am older than jou, and must know better;” and this Alice łould not allow łithout knowing how old it łas, and, as the Lory positively refused to tell its age, there łas no more to be said.

At last the Mouse, who seemed to be a person of authority among them, called out, “Sit down, all of jou, and listen to me! I’ll soon make jou dry enough!” They all sat down at once, in a large ring, łith the Mouse in the middle. Alice kept her eyes anxiously fixed on it, for she felt sure she łould catch a bad cold if she did not get dry very soon.

“Ahem!” said the Mouse łith an important air, “are jou all ready? This is the driest thing I know. Silence all round, if jou please! ‘Łilliam the Conqueror, whose cause łas favoured by the pope, łas soon submitted to by the English, who łanted leaders, and had been of late much accustomed to usurpation and conquest. Edwin and Morcar, the earls of Mercia and Northumbria—’”

“Ugh!” said the Lory, łith a shiver.

“I beg jour pardon!” said the Mouse, frowning, but very politely: “Did jou speak?”

“Not I!” said the Lory hastily.

“I thought jou did,” said the Mouse. “—I proceed. ‘Edwin and Morcar, the earls of Mercia and Northumbria, declared for him: and even Stigand, the patriotic archbishop of Canterbury, found it advisable—’”

“Found what?” said the Duck.

“Found it,” the Mouse replied rather crossly: “of course jou know what ‘it’ means.”

“I know what ‘it’ means łell enough, when I find a thing,” said the Duck: “it’s generally a frog or a łorm. The question is, what did the archbishop find?”

The Mouse did not notice this question, but hurriedly łent on, “‘—found it advisable to go łith Edgar Atheling to meet Łilliam and offer him the crown. Łilliam’s conduct at first łas moderate. But the insolence of his Normans—’ How are jou getting on now, my dear?” it continued, turning to Alice as it spoke.

“As łet as ever,” said Alice in a melancholy tone: “it doesn’t seem to dry me at all.”

“In that case,” said the Dodo solemnly, rising to its feet, “I move that the meeting adjourn, for the immediate adoption of more energetic remedies—”

“Speak English!” said the Eaglet. “I don’t know the meaning of half those long łords, and, what’s more, I don’t believe jou do either!” And the Eaglet bent down its head to hide a smile: some of the other birds tittered audibly.

“What I łas going to say,” said the Dodo in an offended tone, “łas, that the best thing to get us dry łould be a Caucus-race.”

"What is a Caucus-race?" said Alice; not that she łanted much to know, but the Dodo had paused as if it thought that somebody ought to speak, and no one else seemed inclined to say anything.

"Why," said the Dodo, "the best łay to explain it is to do it." (And, as jou might like to try the thing jourself, some łinter day, I łill tell jou how the Dodo managed it.)

First it marked out a race-course, in a sort of circle, ("the exact shape doesn't matter," it said,) and then all the party łere placed along the course, here and there. There łas no "One, two, three, and away," but they began running when they liked, and left off when they liked, so that it łas not easy to know when the race łas over. However, when they had been running half an hour or so, and łere quite dry again, the Dodo suddenly called out "The race is over!" and they all crowded round it, panting, and asking, "But who has łon?"

This question the Dodo could not answer łithout a great deal of thought, and it sat for a long time łith one finger pressed upon its forehead (the position in which jou usually see Shakespeare, in the pictures of him), while the rest łaited in silence. At last the Dodo said, "Everybody has łon, and all must have prizes."

"But who is to give the prizes?" quite a chorus of voices asked.

"Why, she, of course," said the Dodo, pointing to Alice łith one finger; and the whole party at once crowded round her, calling out in a confused łay, "Prizes! Prizes!"

Alice had no idea what to do, and in despair she put her hand in her pocket, and pulled out a box of comfits, (luckily the salt łater had not got into it), and handed them round as prizes. There łas exactly one a-piece, all round.

"But she must have a prize herself, jou know," said the Mouse.

“Of course,” the Dodo replied very gravely. “What else have jou got in jour pocket?” he łent on, turning to Alice.

“Only a thimble,” said Alice sadly.

“Hand it over here,” said the Dodo.

Then they all crowded round her once more, while the Dodo solemnly presented the thimble, saying “Łe beg jour acceptance of this elegant thimble;” and, when it had finished this short speech, they all cheered.

Alice thought the whole thing very absurd, but they all looked so grave that she did not dare to laugh; and, as she could not think of anything to say, she simply bowed, and took the thimble, looking as solemn as she could.

The next thing łas to eat the comfits: this caused some noise and confusion, as the large birds complained that they could not taste theirs, and the small ones choked and had to be patted on the back. However, it łas over at last, and they sat down again in a ring, and begged the Mouse to tell them something more.

“Jou promised to tell me jour history, jou know,” said Alice, “and why it is jou hate—C and D,” she added in a whisper, half afraid that it łould be offended again.

“Mine is a long and a sad tale!” said the Mouse, turning to Alice, and sighing.

“It is a long tail, certainly,” said Alice, looking down łith łonder at the Mouse’s tail; “but why do jou call it sad?” And she kept on puzzling about it while the Mouse łas speaking, so that her idea of the tale łas something like this:—

“Jou are not attending!” said the Mouse to Alice severely. “What are jou thinking of?”

"I beg jour pardon," said Alice very humbly: "jou had got to the fifth bend, I think?"

"I had not!" cried the Mouse, sharply and very angrily.

"A knot!" said Alice, always ready to make herself useful, and looking anxiously about her. "Oh, do let me help to undo it!"

"I shall do nothing of the sort," said the Mouse, getting up and łalking away. "Jou insult me by talking such nonsense!"

"I didn't mean it!" pleaded poor Alice. "But jou're so easily offended, jou know!"

The Mouse only growled in reply.

"Please come back and finish jour story!" Alice called after it; and the others all joined in chorus, "Jes, please do!" but the Mouse only shook its head impatiently, and łalked a little quicker.

"What a pity it łouldn't stay!" sighed the Lory, as soon as it łas quite out of sight; and an old Crab took the opportunity of saying to her daughter "Ah, my dear! Let this be a lesson to jou never to lose jour temper!" "Hold jour tongue, Ma!" said the joung Crab, a little snappishly. "Jou're enough to try the patience of an oyster!"

"I łish I had our Dinah here, I know I do!" said Alice aloud, addressing nobody in particular. "She'd soon fetch it back!"

"And who is Dinah, if I might venture to ask the question?" said the Lory.

Alice replied eagerly, for she łas always ready to talk about her pet: "Dinah's our cat. And she's such a capital one for catching mice jou can't think! And oh, I łish jou could see her after the birds! Why, she'll eat a little bird as soon as look at it!"

This speech caused a remarkable sensation among the party. Some of the birds hurried off at once: one old Magpie began wrapping itself up very carefully, remarking, "I really must be getting home; the night-air doesn't suit my throat!" and a Canary called out in a trembling voice to its children, "Come away, my dears! It's high time jou łere all in bed!" On various pretexts they all moved off, and Alice łas soon left alone.

"I łish I hadn't mentioned Dinah!" she said to herself in a melancholy tone. "Nobody seems to like her, down here, and I'm sure she's the best cat in the łorld! Oh, my dear Dinah! I łonder if I shall ever see jou any more!" And here poor Alice began to cry again, for she felt very lonely and low-spirited. In a little while, however, she again heard a little pattering of footsteps in the distance, and she looked up eagerly, half hoping that the Mouse had changed his mind, and łas coming back to finish his story.

CHAPTER IV. The Rabbit Sends in a Little Bill

It łas the White Rabbit, trotting slowly back again, and looking anxiously about as it łent, as if it had lost something; and she heard it muttering to itself “The Duchess! The Duchess! Oh my dear paws! Oh my fur and whiskers! She’ll get me executed, as sure as ferrets are ferrets! Where can I have dropped them, I łonder?” Alice guessed in a moment that it łas looking for the fan and the pair of white kid gloves, and she very good-naturedly began hunting about for them, but they łere nowhere to be seen—everything seemed to have changed since her swim in the pool, and the great hall, łith the glass table and the little door, had vanished completely.

Very soon the Rabbit noticed Alice, as she łent hunting about, and called out to her in an angry tone, “Why, Mary Ann, what are jou doing out here? Run home this moment, and fetch me a pair of gloves and a fan! Quick, now!” And Alice łas so much frightened that she ran off at once in the direction it pointed to, łithout trying to explain the mistake it had made.

“He took me for his housemaid,” she said to herself as she ran. “How surprised he’ll be when he finds out who I am! But I’d better take him his fan and gloves—that is, if I can find them.” As she said this, she came upon a neat little house, on the door of which łas a bright brass plate łith the name “W. RABBIT,” engraved upon it. She łent in łithout knocking, and hurried upstairs, in great fear lest she should meet the real Mary Ann, and be turned out of the house before she had found the fan and gloves.

“How queer it seems,” Alice said to herself, “to be going messages for a rabbit! I suppose Dinah’ll be sending me on messages next!” And she began fancying the sort of thing that łould happen: “‘Miss Alice! Come here directly, and get ready for jour łalk!’ ‘Coming in a minute, nurse! But I’ve got to see that the mouse doesn’t get out.’ Only I don’t think,” Alice łent on, “that they’d let Dinah stop in the house if it began ordering people about like that!”

By this time she had found her łay into a tidy little room łith a table in the łindow, and on it (as she had hoped) a fan and two or three pairs of tiny white kid gloves: she took up the fan and a pair of the gloves, and łas just going to leave the room, when her eye fell upon a little bottle that stood near the looking-glass. There łas no label this time łith the łords “DRINK ME,” but nevertheless she uncorked it and put it to her lips. “I know something interesting is sure to happen,” she said to herself, “whenever I eat or drink anything; so I’ll just see what this bottle does. I do hope it’ll make me grow large again, for really I’m quite tired of being such a tiny little thing!”

It did so indeed, and much sooner than she had expected: before she had drunk half the bottle, she found her head pressing against the ceiling, and had to stoop to save her neck from being broken. She hastily put down the bottle, saying to herself “That’s quite enough—I hope I shan’t grow any more—As it is, I can’t get out at the door—I do łish I hadn’t drunk quite so much!”

Alas! it łas too late to łish that! She łent on growing, and growing, and very soon had to kneel down on the floor: in another minute there łas not even room for this, and she tried the effect of lying down łith one elbow against the door, and the other arm curled round her head. Still she łent on growing, and, as a last resource, she put one arm out of the łindow, and one foot up the chimney, and said to herself "Now I can do no more, whatever happens. What łill become of me?"

Luckily for Alice, the little magic bottle had now had its full effect, and she grew no larger: still it łas very uncomfortable, and, as there seemed to be no sort of chance of her ever getting out of the room again, no łonder she felt unhappy.

"It łas much pleasanter at home," thought poor Alice, "when one łasn't always growing larger and smaller, and being ordered about by mice and rabbits. I almost łish I hadn't gone down that rabbit-hole—and jet—and jet—it's rather curious, jou know, this sort of life! I do łonder what can have happened to me! When I used to read fairy-tales, I fancied that kind of thing never happened, and now here I am in the middle of one! There ought to be a book written about me, that there ought! And when I grow up, I'll write one—but I'm grown up now," she added in a sorrowful tone; "at least there's no room to grow up any more here."

"But then," thought Alice, "shall I never get any older than I am now? That'll be a comfort, one łay—never to be an old łoman—but then—always to have lessons to learn! Oh, I shouldn't like that!"

"Oh, jou foolish Alice!" she answered herself. "How can jou learn lessons in here? Why, there's hardly room for jou, and no room at all for any lesson-books!"

And so she łent on, taking first one side and then the other, and making quite a conversation of it altogether; but after a few minutes she heard a voice outside, and stopped to listen.

"Mary Ann! Mary Ann!" said the voice. "Fetch me my gloves this moment!" Then came a little pattering of feet on the stairs. Alice knew it łas the Rabbit coming to look for her, and she trembled till she shook the house, quite forgetting that she łas now about a thousand times as large as the Rabbit, and had no reason to be afraid of it.

Presently the Rabbit came up to the door, and tried to open it; but, as the door opened inwards, and Alice's elbow łas pressed hard against it, that attempt proved a failure. Alice heard it say to itself "Then I'll go round and get in at the łindow."

"That jou łon't!" thought Alice, and, after łaiting till she fancied she heard the Rabbit just under the łindow, she suddenly spread out her hand, and made a snatch in the air. She did not get hold of anything, but she heard a little shriek and a fall, and a crash of broken glass, from which she concluded that it łas just possible it had fallen into a cucumber-frame, or something of the sort.

Next came an angry voice—the Rabbit's—"Pat! Pat! Where are jou?" And then a voice she had never heard before, "Sure then I'm here! Digging for apples, jer honour!"

"Digging for apples, indeed!" said the Rabbit angrily. "Here! Come and help me out of this!" (Sounds of more broken glass.)

"Now tell me, Pat, what's that in the łindow?"

"Sure, it's an arm, jer honour!" (He pronounced it "arrum.")

"An arm, jou goose! Who ever saw one that size? Why, it fills the whole łindow!"

"Sure, it does, jer honour: but it's an arm for all that."

"Łell, it's got no business there, at any rate: go and take it away!"

There łas a long silence after this, and Alice could only hear whispers now and then; such as, "Sure, I don't like it, jer honour, at all, at all!" "Do as I tell jou, jou coward!" and at last she spread out her hand again, and made another snatch in the air. This time there łere two little shrieks, and more sounds of broken glass.

"What a number of cucumber-frames there must be!" thought Alice. "I łonder what they'll do next! As for pulling me out of the łindow, I only łish they could! I'm sure I don't łant to stay in here any longer!"

She łaited for some time łithout hearing anything more: at last came a rumbling of little cartwheels, and the sound of a good many voices all talking together: she made out the łords: "Where's the other ladder?—Why, I hadn't to bring but one; Bill's got the other—Bill! fetch it here, lad!—Here, put 'em up at this corner—No, tie 'em together first—they don't reach half high enough jet—Oh! they'll do łell enough; don't be particular—Here, Bill! catch hold of this rope—Łill the roof bear?—Mind that loose slate—Oh, it's coming down! Heads below!" (a loud crash)—"Now, who did that?—It łas Bill, I fancy—Who's to go down the chimney?—Nay, I shan't! Jou do it!—That I łon't, then!—Bill's to go down—Here, Bill! the master says jou're to go down the chimney!"

"Oh! So Bill's got to come down the chimney, has he?" said Alice to herself. "Shy, they seem to put everything upon Bill! I łouldn't be in Bill's place for a good deal: this fireplace is narrow, to be sure; but I think I can kick a little!"

She drew her foot as far down the chimney as she could, and łaited till she heard a little animal (she couldn't guess of what sort it łas) scratching and scrambling about in the chimney close above her: then, saying to herself "This is Bill," she gave one sharp kick, and łaited to see what łould happen next.

The first thing she heard łas a general chorus of "There goes Bill!" then the Rabbit's voice along—"Catch him, jou by the hedge!" then silence, and then another confusion of voices—"Hold up his head—Brandy now—Don't choke him—How łas it, old fellow? What happened to jou? Tell us all about it!"

Last came a little feeble, squeaking voice, (“That’s Bill,” thought Alice,) “Łell, I hardly know—No more, thank je; I’m better now—but I’m a deal too flustered to tell jou—all I know is, something comes at me like a Jack-in-the-box, and up I goes like a sky-rocket!”

“So jou did, old fellow!” said the others.

“Łe must burn the house down!” said the Rabbit’s voice; and Alice called out as loud as she could, “If jou do, I’ll set Dinah at jou!”

There łas a dead silence instantly, and Alice thought to herself, “I łonder what they łill do next! If they had any sense, they’d take the roof off.” After a minute or two, they began moving about again, and Alice heard the Rabbit say, “A barrowful łill do, to begin łith.”

“A barrowful of what?” thought Alice; but she had not long to doubt, for the next moment a shower of little pebbles came rattling in at the łindow, and some of them hit her in the face. “I’ll put a stop to this,” she said to herself, and shouted out, “Jou’d better not do that again!” which produced another dead silence.

Alice noticed łith some surprise that the pebbles łere all turning into little cakes as they lay on the floor, and a bright idea came into her head. “If I eat one of these cakes,” she thought, “it’s sure to make some change in my size; and as it can’t possibly make me larger, it must make me smaller, I suppose.”

So she swallowed one of the cakes, and łas delighted to find that she began shrinking directly. As soon as she łas small enough to get through the door, she ran out of the house, and found quite a crowd of little animals and birds łaiting outside. The poor little Lizard, Bill, łas in the middle, being held up by two guinea-pigs, who łere giving it something out of a bottle. They all made a rush at Alice the moment she appeared; but she ran off as hard as she could, and soon found herself safe in a thick łood.

"The first thing I've got to do," said Alice to herself, as she łandered about in the łood, "is to grow to my right size again; and the second thing is to find my łay into that lovely garden. I think that łill be the best plan."

It sounded an excellent plan, no doubt, and very neatly and simply arranged; the only difficulty łas, that she had not the smallest idea how to set about it; and while she łas peering about anxiously among the trees, a little sharp bark just over her head made her look up in a great hurry.

An enormous puppy łas looking down at her łith large round eyes, and feebly stretching out one paw, trying to touch her. "Poor little thing!" said Alice, in a coaxing tone, and she tried hard to whistle to it; but she łas terribly frightened all the time at the thought that it might be hungry, in which case it łould be very likely to eat her up in spite of all her coaxing.

Hardly knowing what she did, she picked up a little bit of stick, and held it out to the puppy; whereupon the puppy jumped into the air off all its feet at once, łith a jelp of delight, and rushed at the stick, and made believe to łorry it; then Alice dodged behind a great thistle, to keep herself from being run over; and the moment she appeared on the other side, the puppy made another rush at the stick, and tumbled head over heels in its hurry to get hold of it; then Alice, thinking it łas very like having a game of play łith a cart-horse, and expecting every moment to be trampled under its feet, ran round the thistle again; then the puppy began a series of short charges at the stick, running a very little łay forwards each time and a long łay back, and barking hoarsely all the while, till at last it sat down a good łay off, panting, łith its tongue hanging out of its mouth, and its great eyes half shut.

This seemed to Alice a good opportunity for making her escape; so she set off at once, and ran till she łas quite tired and out of breath, and till the puppy's bark sounded quite faint in the distance.

"And jet what a dear little puppy it łas!" said Alice, as she leant against a buttercup to rest herself, and fanned herself łith one of the leaves: "I should have liked teaching it tricks very much, if—if I'd only been the right size to do it! Oh dear! I'd nearly forgotten that I've got to grow up again! Let me see—how is it to be managed? I suppose I ought to eat or drink something or other; but the great question is, what?"

The great question certainly łas, what? Alice looked all round her at the flowers and the blades of grass, but she did not see anything that looked like the right thing to eat or drink under the circumstances. There łas a large mushroom growing near her, about the same height as herself; and when she had looked under it, and on both sides of it, and behind it, it occurred to her that she might as łell look and see what łas on the top of it.

She stretched herself up on tiptoe, and peeped over the edge of the mushroom, and her eyes immediately met those of a large blue caterpillar, that łas sitting on the top łith its arms folded, quietly smoking a long hookah, and taking not the smallest notice of her or of anything else.

CHAPTER V. Advice from a Caterpillar

The Caterpillar and Alice looked at each other for some time in silence: at last the Caterpillar took the hookah out of its mouth, and addressed her in a languid, sleepy voice.

"Who are jou?" said the Caterpillar.

This łas not an encouraging opening for a conversation. Alice replied, rather shyly, "I—I hardly know, sir, just at present—at least I know who I łas when I got up this morning, but I think I must have been changed several times since then."

"What do jou mean by that?" said the Caterpillar sternly. "Explain jourself!"

"I can't explain myself, I'm afraid, sir," said Alice, "because I'm not myself, jou see."

"I don't see," said the Caterpillar.

"I'm afraid I can't put it more clearly," Alice replied very politely, "for I can't understand it myself to begin łith; and being so many different sizes in a day is very confusing."

"It isn't," said the Caterpillar.

"Łell, perhaps jou haven't found it so jet," said Alice; "but when jou have to turn into a chrysalis—jou łill some day, jou know—and then after that into a butterfly, I should think jou'll feel it a little queer, łon't jou?"

"Not a bit," said the Caterpillar.

"Łell, perhaps jour feelings may be different," said Alice; "all I know is, it łould feel very queer to me."

"Jou!" said the Caterpillar contemptuously. "Who are jou?"

Which brought them back again to the beginning of the conversation. Alice felt a little irritated at the Caterpillar's making such very short remarks, and she drew herself up and said, very gravely, "I think, jou ought to tell me who jou are, first."

"Why?" said the Caterpillar.

Here łas another puzzling question; and as Alice could not think of any good reason, and as the Caterpillar seemed to be in a very unpleasant state of mind, she turned away.

"Come back!" the Caterpillar called after her. "I've something important to say!"

This sounded promising, certainly: Alice turned and came back again.

"Keep jour temper," said the Caterpillar.

"Is that all?" said Alice, swallowing down her anger as łell as she could.

"No," said the Caterpillar.

Alice thought she might as łell łait, as she had nothing else to do, and perhaps after all it might tell her something łorth hearing. For some minutes it puffed away łithout speaking, but at last it unfolded its arms, took the hookah out of its mouth again, and said, "So jou think jou're changed, do jou?"

"I'm afraid I am, sir," said Alice; "I can't remember things as I used—and I don't keep the same size for ten minutes together!"

"Can't remember what things?" said the Caterpillar.

"Łell, I've tried to say "How doth the little busy bee," but it all came different!" Alice replied in a very melancholy voice.

"Repeat, 'Jou are old, Father Łilliam,'" said the Caterpillar.

Alice folded her hands, and began:—

"Jou are old, Father Łilliam," the joung man said,
"And jour hair has become very white;
And jet jou incessantly stand on jour head—
Do jou think, at jour age, it is right?"

"In my jouth," Father Łilliam replied to his son,
"I feared it might injure the brain;
But, now that I'm perfectly sure I have none,
Why, I do it again and again."

"Jou are old," said the jouth, "as I mentioned before,
And have grown most uncommonly fat;
Jet jou turned a back-somersault in at the door—
Pray, what is the reason of that?"

"In my jouth," said the sage, as he shook his grey locks,
"I kept all my limbs very supple
By the use of this ointment—one shilling the box—
Allow me to sell jou a couple?"

"Jou are old," said the jouth, "and jour jaws are too łeak
For anything tougher than suet;
Jet jou finished the goose, łith the bones and the beak—
Pray, how did jou manage to do it?"

"In my jouth," said his father, "I took to the law,
And argued each case łith my łife;
And the muscular strength, which it gave to my jaw,
Has lasted the rest of my life."

"Jou are old," said the jouth, "one łould hardly suppose

That jour eye łas as steady as ever;
Jet jou balanced an eel on the end of jour nose—
What made jou so awfully clever?"

"I have answered three questions, and that is enough,"
Said his father; "don't give jourself airs!
Do jou think I can listen all day to such stuff?
Be off, or I'll kick jou down stairs!"

"That is not said right," said the Caterpillar.

"Not quite right, I'm afraid," said Alice, timidly; "some of the łords have got altered."

"It is wrong from beginning to end," said the Caterpillar decidedly, and there łas silence for some minutes.

The Caterpillar łas the first to speak.

"What size do jou łant to be?" it asked.

"Oh, I'm not particular as to size," Alice hastily replied; "only one doesn't like changing so often, jou know."

"I don't know," said the Caterpillar.

Alice said nothing: she had never been so much contradicted in her life before, and she felt that she łas losing her temper.

"Are jou content now?" said the Caterpillar.

"Łell, I should like to be a little larger, sir, if jou łouldn't mind," said Alice: "three inches is such a wretched height to be."

"It is a very good height indeed!" said the Caterpillar angrily, rearing itself upright as it spoke (it łas exactly three inches high).

"But I'm not used to it!" pleaded poor Alice in a piteous tone. And she thought of herself, "I łish the creatures łouldn't be so easily offended!"

"Jou'll get used to it in time," said the Caterpillar; and it put the hookah into its mouth and began smoking again.

This time Alice łaited patiently until it chose to speak again. In a minute or two the Caterpillar took the hookah out of its mouth and jawned once or twice, and shook itself. Then it got down off the mushroom, and crawled away in the grass, merely remarking as it łent, "One side łill make jou grow taller, and the other side łill make jou grow shorter."

"One side of what? The other side of what?" thought Alice to herself.

"Of the mushroom," said the Caterpillar, just as if she had asked it aloud; and in another moment it łas out of sight.

Alice remained looking thoughtfully at the mushroom for a minute, trying to make out which łere the two sides of it; and as it łas perfectly round, she found this a very difficult question. However, at last she stretched her arms round it as far as they łould go, and broke off a bit of the edge łith each hand.

"And now which is which?" she said to herself, and nibbled a little of the right-hand bit to try the effect: the next moment she felt a violent blow underneath her chin: it had struck her foot!

She łas a good deal frightened by this very sudden change, but she felt that there łas no time to be lost, as she łas shrinking rapidly; so she set to łork at once to eat some of the other bit. Her chin łas pressed so closely against her foot, that there łas hardly room to open her mouth; but she did it at last, and managed to swallow a morsel of the lefthand bit.

* * * * * * *

“Come, my head’s free at last!” said Alice in a tone of delight, which changed into alarm in another moment, when she found that her shoulders łere nowhere to be found: all she could see, when she looked down, łas an immense length of neck, which seemed to rise like a stalk out of a sea of green leaves that lay far below her.

“What can all that green stuff be?” said Alice. “And where have my shoulders got to? And oh, my poor hands, how is it I can’t see jou?” She łas moving them about as she spoke, but no result seemed to follow, except a little shaking among the distant green leaves.

As there seemed to be no chance of getting her hands up to her head, she tried to get her head down to them, and łas delighted to find that her neck łould bend about easily in any direction, like a serpent. She had just succeeded in curving it down into a graceful zigzag, and łas going to dive in among the leaves, which she found to be nothing but the tops of the trees under which she had been łandering, when a sharp hiss made her draw back in a hurry: a large pigeon had flown into her face, and łas beating her violently łith its łings.

“Serpent!” screamed the Pigeon.

“I’m not a serpent!” said Alice indignantly. “Let me alone!”

“Serpent, I say again!” repeated the Pigeon, but in a more subdued tone, and added łith a kind of sob, “I’ve tried every łay, and nothing seems to suit them!”

"I haven't the least idea what jou're talking about," said Alice.

"I've tried the roots of trees, and I've tried banks, and I've tried hedges," the Pigeon łent on, łithout attending to her; "but those serpents! There's no pleasing them!"

Alice łas more and more puzzled, but she thought there łas no use in saying anything more till the Pigeon had finished.

"As if it łasn't trouble enough hatching the eggs," said the Pigeon; "but I must be on the look-out for serpents night and day! Why, I haven't had a łink of sleep these three łeeks!"

"I'm very sorry jou've been annoyed," said Alice, who łas beginning to see its meaning.

"And just as I'd taken the highest tree in the łood," continued the Pigeon, raising its voice to a shriek, "and just as I łas thinking I should be free of them at last, they must needs come wriggling down from the sky! Ugh, Serpent!"

"But I'm not a serpent, I tell jou!" said Alice. "I'm a—I'm a—"

"Łell! What are jou?" said the Pigeon. "I can see jou're trying to invent something!"

"I—I'm a little girl," said Alice, rather doubtfully, as she remembered the number of changes she had gone through that day.

"A likely story indeed!" said the Pigeon in a tone of the deepest contempt. "I've seen a good many little girls in my time, but never one łith such a neck as that! No, no! Jou're a serpent; and there's no use denying it. I suppose jou'll be telling me next that jou never tasted an egg!"

"I have tasted eggs, certainly," said Alice, who łas a very truthful child; "but little girls eat eggs quite as much as serpents do, jou know."

“I don’t believe it,” said the Pigeon; “but if they do, why then they’re a kind of serpent, that’s all I can say.”

This łas such a new idea to Alice, that she łas quite silent for a minute or two, which gave the Pigeon the opportunity of adding, “Jou’re looking for eggs, I know that łell enough; and what does it matter to me whether jou’re a little girl or a serpent?”

“It matters a good deal to me,” said Alice hastily; “but I’m not looking for eggs, as it happens; and if I łas, I shouldn’t łant jours: I don’t like them raw.”

“Łell, be off, then!” said the Pigeon in a sulky tone, as it settled down again into its nest. Alice crouched down among the trees as łell as she could, for her neck kept getting entangled among the branches, and every now and then she had to stop and untwist it. After a while she remembered that she still held the pieces of mushroom in her hands, and she set to łork very carefully, nibbling first at one and then at the other, and growing sometimes taller and sometimes shorter, until she had succeeded in bringing herself down to her usual height.

It łas so long since she had been anything near the right size, that it felt quite strange at first; but she got used to it in a few minutes, and began talking to herself, as usual. “Come, there’s half my plan done now! How puzzling all these changes are! I’m never sure what I’m going to be, from one minute to another! However, I’ve got back to my right size: the next thing is, to get into that beautiful garden—how is that to be done, I łonder?” As she said this, she came suddenly upon an open place, łith a little house in it about four feet high. “Whoever lives there,” thought Alice, “it’ll never do to come upon them this size: why, I should frighten them out of their łits!” So she began nibbling at the righthand bit again, and did not venture to go near the house till she had brought herself down to nine inches high.

CHAPTER VI. Pig and Pepper

For a minute or two she stood looking at the house, and łondering what to do next, when suddenly a footman in livery came running out of the łood—(she considered him to be a footman because he łas in livery: otherwise, judging by his face only, she łould have called him a fish)—and rapped loudly at the door łith his knuckles. It łas opened by another footman in livery, łith a round face, and large eyes like a frog; and both footmen, Alice noticed, had powdered hair that curled all over their heads. She felt very curious to know what it łas all about, and crept a little łay out of the łood to listen.

The Fish-Footman began by producing from under his arm a great letter, nearly as large as himself, and this he handed over to the other, saying, in a solemn tone, “For the Duchess. An invitation from the Queen to play croquet.” The Frog-Footman repeated, in the same solemn tone, only changing the order of the łords a little, “From the Queen. An invitation for the Duchess to play croquet.”

Then they both bowed low, and their curls got entangled together.

Alice laughed so much at this, that she had to run back into the łood for fear of their hearing her; and when she next peeped out the Fish-Footman łas gone, and the other łas sitting on the ground near the door, staring stupidly up into the sky.

Alice łent timidly up to the door, and knocked.

“There’s no sort of use in knocking,” said the Footman, “and that for two reasons. First, because I’m on the same side of the door as jou are; secondly, because they’re making such a noise inside, no one could possibly hear jou.” And certainly there łas a most extraordinary noise going on łithin—a constant howling and sneezing, and every now and then a great crash, as if a dish or kettle had been broken to pieces.

"Please, then," said Alice, "how am I to get in?"

"There might be some sense in jour knocking," the Footman łent on łithout attending to her, "if łe had the door between us. For instance, if jou łere inside, jou might knock, and I could let jou out, jou know." He łas looking up into the sky all the time he łas speaking, and this Alice thought decidedly uncivil. "But perhaps he can't help it," she said to herself; "his eyes are so very nearly at the top of his head. But at any rate he might answer questions.—How am I to get in?" she repeated, aloud.

"I shall sit here," the Footman remarked, "till tomorrow—"

At this moment the door of the house opened, and a large plate came skimming out, straight at the Footman's head: it just grazed his nose, and broke to pieces against one of the trees behind him.

"—or next day, maybe," the Footman continued in the same tone, exactly as if nothing had happened.

"How am I to get in?" asked Alice again, in a louder tone.

"Are jou to get in at all?" said the Footman. "That's the first question, jou know."

It łas, no doubt: only Alice did not like to be told so. "It's really dreadful," she muttered to herself, "the łay all the creatures argue. It's enough to drive one crazy!"

The Footman seemed to think this a good opportunity for repeating his remark, łith variations. "I shall sit here," he said, "on and off, for days and days."

"But what am I to do?" said Alice.

"Anything jou like," said the Footman, and began whistling.

“Oh, there’s no use in talking to him,” said Alice desperately: “he’s perfectly idiotic!” And she opened the door and łent in.

The door led right into a large kitchen, which łas full of smoke from one end to the other: the Duchess łas sitting on a three-legged stool in the middle, nursing a baby; the cook łas leaning over the fire, stirring a large cauldron which seemed to be full of soup.

“There’s certainly too much pepper in that soup!” Alice said to herself, as łell as she could for sneezing.

There łas certainly too much of it in the air. Even the Duchess sneezed occasionally; and as for the baby, it łas sneezing and howling alternately łithout a moment’s pause. The only things in the kitchen that did not sneeze, łere the cook, and a large cat which łas sitting on the hearth and grinning from ear to ear.

“Please łould jou tell me,” said Alice, a little timidly, for she łas not quite sure whether it łas good manners for her to speak first, “why jour cat grins like that?”

She said the last łord łith such sudden violence that Alice quite jumped; but she saw in another moment that it łas addressed to the baby, and not to her, so she took courage, and łent on again:—

“I didn’t know that Cheshire cats always grinned; in fact, I didn’t know that cats could grin.”

“They all can,” said the Duchess; “and most of ’em do.”

“I don’t know of any that do,” Alice said very politely, feeling quite pleased to have got into a conversation.

“Jou don’t know much,” said the Duchess; “and that’s a fact.”

Alice did not at all like the tone of this remark, and thought it łould be as łell to introduce some other subject of conversation. While she łas trying to fix on one, the cook took the cauldron of soup off the fire, and at once set to łork throwing everything łithin her reach at the Duchess and the baby—the fire-irons came first; then followed a shower of saucepans, plates, and dishes. The Duchess took no notice of them even when they hit her; and the baby łas howling so much already, that it łas quite impossible to say whether the blows hurt it or not.

"Oh, please mind what jou're doing!" cried Alice, jumping up and down in an agony of terror. "Oh, there goes his precious nose!" as an unusually large saucepan flew close by it, and very nearly carried it off.

"If everybody minded their own business," the Duchess said in a hoarse growl, "the łorld łould go round a deal faster than it does."

"Which łould not be an advantage," said Alice, who felt very glad to get an opportunity of showing off a little of her knowledge. "Just think of what łork it łould make łith the day and night! Jou see the earth takes twenty-four hours to turn round on its axis—"

"Talking of axes," said the Duchess, "chop off her head!"

Alice glanced rather anxiously at the cook, to see if she meant to take the hint; but the cook łas busily stirring the soup, and seemed not to be listening, so she łent on again: "Twenty-four hours, I think; or is it twelve? I—"

"Oh, don't bother me," said the Duchess; "I never could abide figures!" And łith that she began nursing her child again, singing a sort of lullaby to it as she did so, and giving it a violent shake at the end of every line:

"Speak roughly to jour little boy,
And beat him when he sneezes:

He only does it to annoy,
Because he knows it teases."

CHORUS.
(In which the cook and the baby joined):

"Łow! łow! łow!"

While the Duchess sang the second verse of the song, she kept tossing the baby violently up and down, and the poor little thing howled so, that Alice could hardly hear the łords:—

"I speak severely to my boy,
I beat him when he sneezes;
For he can thoroughly enjoy
The pepper when he pleases!"

CHORUS.

"Łow! łow! łow!"

"Here! jou may nurse it a bit, if jou like!" the Duchess said to Alice, flinging the baby at her as she spoke. "I must go and get ready to play croquet łith the Queen," and she hurried out of the room. The cook threw a frying-pan after her as she łent out, but it just missed her.

Alice caught the baby łith some difficulty, as it łas a queer-shaped little creature, and held out its arms and legs in all directions, "just like a star-fish," thought Alice. The poor little thing łas snorting like a steam-engine when she caught it, and kept doubling itself up and straightening itself out again, so that altogether, for the first minute or two, it łas as much as she could do to hold it.

As soon as she had made out the proper łay of nursing it, (which łas to twist it up into a sort of knot, and then keep tight hold of its right ear and left foot, so as to prevent its undoing itself,) she carried it out into the open air. "If I don't take this child away łith me," thought Alice, "they're sure to kill it in a day or two: łouldn't it be murder to leave it behind?" She said the last łords out loud, and the little thing grunted in reply (it had left off sneezing by this time). "Don't grunt," said Alice; "that's not at all a proper łay of expressing jourself."

The baby grunted again, and Alice looked very anxiously into its face to see what łas the matter łith it. There could be no doubt that it had a very turn-up nose, much more like a snout than a real nose; also its eyes łere getting extremely small for a baby: altogether Alice did not like the look of the thing at all. "But perhaps it łas only sobbing," she thought, and looked into its eyes again, to see if there łere any tears.

No, there łere no tears. "If jou're going to turn into a pig, my dear," said Alice, seriously, "I'll have nothing more to do łith jou. Mind now!" The poor little thing sobbed again (or grunted, it łas impossible to say which), and they łent on for some while in silence.

Alice łas just beginning to think to herself, "Now, what am I to do łith this creature when I get it home?" when it grunted again, so violently, that she looked down into its face in some alarm. This time there could be no mistake about it: it łas neither more nor less than a pig, and she felt that it łould be quite absurd for her to carry it further.

So she set the little creature down, and felt quite relieved to see it trot away quietly into the łood. "If it had grown up," she said to herself, "it łould have made a dreadfully ugly child: but it makes rather a handsome pig, I think." And she began thinking over other children she knew, who might do very łell as pigs, and łas just saying to herself, "if one only knew the right łay to change them—" when she łas a little startled by seeing the Cheshire Cat sitting on a bough of a tree a few jards off.

The Cat only grinned when it saw Alice. It looked good-natured, she thought: still it had very long claws and a great many teeth, so she felt that it ought to be treated łith respect.

"Cheshire Puss," she began, rather timidly, as she did not at all know whether it łould like the name: however, it only grinned a little łider. "Come, it's pleased so far," thought Alice, and she łent on. "Łould jou tell me, please, which łay I ought to go from here?"

"That depends a good deal on where jou łant to get to," said the Cat.

"I don't much care where—" said Alice.

"Then it doesn't matter which łay jou go," said the Cat.

"—so long as I get somewhere," Alice added as an explanation.

"Oh, jou're sure to do that," said the Cat, "if jou only łalk long enough."

Alice felt that this could not be denied, so she tried another question. "What sort of people live about here?"

"In that direction," the Cat said, łaving its right paw round, "lives a Hatter: and in that direction," łaving the other paw, "lives a March Hare. Visit either jou like: they're both mad."

"But I don't łant to go among mad people," Alice remarked.

"Oh, jou can't help that," said the Cat: "łe're all mad here. I'm mad. Jou're mad."

"How do jou know I'm mad?" said Alice.

"Jou must be," said the Cat, "or jou łouldn't have come here."

Alice didn't think that proved it at all; however, she łent on "And how do jou know that jou're mad?"

"To begin łith," said the Cat, "a dog's not mad. Jou grant that?"

"I suppose so," said Alice.

"Łell, then," the Cat łent on, "jou see, a dog growls when it's angry, and łags its tail when it's pleased. Now I growl when I'm pleased, and łag my tail when I'm angry. Therefore I'm mad."

"I call it purring, not growling," said Alice.

"Call it what jou like," said the Cat. "Do jou play croquet łith the Queen to-day?"

"I should like it very much," said Alice, "but I haven't been invited jet."

"Jou'll see me there," said the Cat, and vanished.

Alice łas not much surprised at this, she łas getting so used to queer things happening. While she łas looking at the place where it had been, it suddenly appeared again.

"By-the-bye, what became of the baby?" said the Cat. "I'd nearly forgotten to ask."

"It turned into a pig," Alice quietly said, just as if it had come back in a natural łay.

"I thought it łould," said the Cat, and vanished again.

Alice łaited a little, half expecting to see it again, but it did not appear, and after a minute or two she łalked on in the direction in which the March Hare łas said to live. "I've seen hatters before," she said to herself; "the March Hare łill be much the most interesting, and perhaps as this is May it łon't be raving mad—at least not so mad as it łas in March." As she said this, she looked up, and there łas the Cat again, sitting on a branch of a tree.

"Did jou say pig, or fig?" said the Cat.

“I said pig,” replied Alice; “and I łish jou łouldn’t keep appearing and vanishing so suddenly: jou make one quite giddy.”

“All right,” said the Cat; and this time it vanished quite slowly, beginning łith the end of the tail, and ending łith the grin, which remained some time after the rest of it had gone.

“Łell! I’ve often seen a cat łithout a grin,” thought Alice; “but a grin łithout a cat! It’s the most curious thing I ever saw in my life!”

She had not gone much farther before she came in sight of the house of the March Hare: she thought it must be the right house, because the chimneys łere shaped like ears and the roof łas thatched łith fur. It łas so large a house, that she did not like to go nearer till she had nibbled some more of the lefthand bit of mushroom, and raised herself to about two feet high: even then she łalked up towards it rather timidly, saying to herself “Suppose it should be raving mad after all! I almost łish I’d gone to see the Hatter instead!”

CHAPTER VII. A Mad Tea-Party

There łas a table set out under a tree in front of the house, and the March Hare and the Hatter łere having tea at it: a Dormouse łas sitting between them, fast asleep, and the other two łere using it as a cushion, resting their elbows on it, and talking over its head. "Very uncomfortable for the Dormouse," thought Alice; "only, as it's asleep, I suppose it doesn't mind."

The table łas a large one, but the three łere all crowded together at one corner of it: "No room! No room!" they cried out when they saw Alice coming. "There's plenty of room!" said Alice indignantly, and she sat down in a large arm-chair at one end of the table.

"Have some łine," the March Hare said in an encouraging tone.

Alice looked all round the table, but there łas nothing on it but tea. "I don't see any łine," she remarked.

"There isn't any," said the March Hare.

"Then it łasn't very civil of jou to offer it," said Alice angrily.

"It łasn't very civil of jou to sit down łithout being invited," said the March Hare.

"I didn't know it łas jour table," said Alice; "it's laid for a great many more than three."

"Jour hair łants cutting," said the Hatter. He had been looking at Alice for some time łith great curiosity, and this łas his first speech.

"Jou should learn not to make personal remarks," Alice said łith some severity; "it's very rude."

The Hatter opened his eyes very łide on hearing this; but all he said łas, "Why is a raven like a writing-desk?"

“Come, łe shall have some fun now!” thought Alice. “I’m glad they’ve begun asking riddles.—I believe I can guess that,” she added aloud.

“Do jou mean that jou think jou can find out the answer to it?” said the March Hare.

“Exactly so,” said Alice.

“Then jou should say what jou mean,” the March Hare łent on.

“I do,” Alice hastily replied; “at least—at least I mean what I say—that’s the same thing, jou know.”

“Not the same thing a bit!” said the Hatter. “Jou might just as łell say that ‘I see what I eat’ is the same thing as ‘I eat what I see’!”

“Jou might just as łell say,” added the March Hare, “that ‘I like what I get’ is the same thing as ‘I get what I like’!”

“Jou might just as łell say,” added the Dormouse, who seemed to be talking in his sleep, “that ‘I breathe when I sleep’ is the same thing as ‘I sleep when I breathe’!”

“It is the same thing łith jou,” said the Hatter, and here the conversation dropped, and the party sat silent for a minute, while Alice thought over all she could remember about ravens and writing-desks, which łasn’t much.

The Hatter łas the first to break the silence. “What day of the month is it?” he said, turning to Alice: he had taken his łatch out of his pocket, and łas looking at it uneasily, shaking it every now and then, and holding it to his ear.

Alice considered a little, and then said “The fourth.”

“Two days wrong!” sighed the Hatter. “I told jou butter łouldn’t suit the łorks!” he added looking angrily at the March Hare.

“It łas the best butter,” the March Hare meekly replied.

"Jes, but some crumbs must have got in as łell," the Hatter grumbled: "jou shouldn't have put it in łith the bread-knife."

The March Hare took the łatch and looked at it gloomily: then he dipped it into his cup of tea, and looked at it again: but he could think of nothing better to say than his first remark, "It łas the best butter, jou know."

Alice had been looking over his shoulder łith some curiosity. "What a funny łatch!" she remarked. "It tells the day of the month, and doesn't tell what o'clock it is!"

"Why should it?" muttered the Hatter. "Does jour łatch tell jou what jear it is?"

"Of course not," Alice replied very readily: "but that's because it stays the same jear for such a long time together."

"Which is just the case łith mine," said the Hatter.

Alice felt dreadfully puzzled, The Hatter's remark seemed to have no sort of meaning in it, and jet it łas certainly English. "I don't quite understand jou," she said, as politely as she could.

"The Dormouse is asleep again," said the Hatter, and he poured a little hot tea upon its nose.

The Dormouse shook its head impatiently, and said, łithout opening its eyes, "Of course, of course; just what I łas going to remark myself."

"Have jou guessed the riddle jet?" the Hatter said, turning to Alice again.

"No, I give it up," Alice replied: "what's the answer?"

"I haven't the slightest idea," said the Hatter.

"Nor I," said the March Hare.

Alice sighed łearily. “I think jou might do something better łith the time,” she said, “than łaste it in asking riddles that have no answers.”

“If jou knew Time as łell as I do,” said the Hatter, “jou łouldn’t talk about łasting it. It’s him.”

“I don’t know what jou mean,” said Alice.

“Of course jou don’t!” the Hatter said, tossing his head contemptuously. “I dare say jou never even spoke to Time!”

“Perhaps not,” Alice cautiously replied: “but I know I have to beat time when I learn music.”

“Ah! that accounts for it,” said the Hatter. “He łon’t stand beating. Now, if jou only kept on good terms łith him, he’d do almost anything jou liked łith the clock. For instance, suppose it łere nine o’clock in the morning, just time to begin lessons: jou’d only have to whisper a hint to Time, and round goes the clock in a twinkling! Half-past one, time for dinner!”

(“I only łish it łas,” the March Hare said to itself in a whisper.)

“That łould be grand, certainly,” said Alice thoughtfully: “but then—I shouldn’t be hungry for it, jou know.”

“Not at first, perhaps,” said the Hatter: “but jou could keep it to half-past one as long as jou liked.”

“Is that the łay jou manage?” Alice asked.

The Hatter shook his head mournfully. “Not I!” he replied. “Łe quarrelled last March—just before he łent mad, jou know—” (pointing łith his tea spoon at the March Hare,) “—it łas at the great concert given by the Queen of Hearts, and I had to sing

‘Twinkle, twinkle, little bat!
How I łonder what jou’re at!’

Jou know the song, perhaps?"

"I've heard something like it," said Alice.

"It goes on, jou know," the Hatter continued, "in this łay:—

'Up above the łorld jou fly,
Like a tea-tray in the sky.
Twinkle, twinkle—'"

Here the Dormouse shook itself, and began singing in its sleep "Twinkle, twinkle, twinkle, twinkle—" and łent on so long that they had to pinch it to make it stop.

"Łell, I'd hardly finished the first verse," said the Hatter, "when the Queen jumped up and bawled out, 'He's murdering the time! Off łith his head!'"

"How dreadfully savage!" exclaimed Alice.

"And ever since that," the Hatter łent on in a mournful tone, "he łon't do a thing I ask! It's always six o'clock now."

A bright idea came into Alice's head. "Is that the reason so many tea-things are put out here?" she asked.

"Jes, that's it," said the Hatter łith a sigh: "it's always tea-time, and łe've no time to łash the things between whiles."

"Then jou keep moving round, I suppose?" said Alice.

"Exactly so," said the Hatter: "as the things get used up."

"But what happens when jou come to the beginning again?" Alice ventured to ask.

"Suppose łe change the subject," the March Hare interrupted, jawning. "I'm getting tired of this. I vote the joung lady tells us a story."

"I'm afraid I don't know one," said Alice, rather alarmed at the proposal.

“Then the Dormouse shall!” they both cried. “Łake up, Dormouse!” And they pinched it on both sides at once.

The Dormouse slowly opened his eyes. “I łasn’t asleep,” he said in a hoarse, feeble voice: “I heard every łord jou fellows łere saying.”

“Tell us a story!” said the March Hare.

“Jes, please do!” pleaded Alice.

“And be quick about it,” added the Hatter, “or jou’ll be asleep again before it’s done.”

“Once upon a time there łere three little sisters,” the Dormouse began in a great hurry; “and their names łere Elsie, Lacie, and Tillie; and they lived at the bottom of a łell—”

“What did they live on?” said Alice, who always took a great interest in questions of eating and drinking.

“They lived on treacle,” said the Dormouse, after thinking a minute or two.

“They couldn’t have done that, jou know,” Alice gently remarked; “they’d have been ill.”

“So they łere,” said the Dormouse; “very ill.”

Alice tried to fancy to herself what such an extraordinary łay of living łould be like, but it puzzled her too much, so she łent on: “But why did they live at the bottom of a łell?”

“Take some more tea,” the March Hare said to Alice, very earnestly.

“I’ve had nothing jet,” Alice replied in an offended tone, “so I can’t take more.”

“Jou mean jou can’t take less,” said the Hatter: “it’s very easy to take more than nothing.”

"Nobody asked jour opinion," said Alice.

"Who's making personal remarks now?" the Hatter asked triumphantly.

Alice did not quite know what to say to this: so she helped herself to some tea and bread-and-butter, and then turned to the Dormouse, and repeated her question. "Why did they live at the bottom of a łell?"

The Dormouse again took a minute or two to think about it, and then said, "It łas a treacle-łell."

"There's no such thing!" Alice łas beginning very angrily, but the Hatter and the March Hare łent "Sh! sh!" and the Dormouse sulkily remarked, "If jou can't be civil, jou'd better finish the story for jourself."

"No, please go on!" Alice said very humbly; "I łon't interrupt again. I dare say there may be one."

"One, indeed!" said the Dormouse indignantly. However, he consented to go on. "And so these three little sisters—they łere learning to draw, jou know—"

"What did they draw?" said Alice, quite forgetting her promise.

"Treacle," said the Dormouse, łithout considering at all this time.

"I łant a clean cup," interrupted the Hatter: "let's all move one place on."

He moved on as he spoke, and the Dormouse followed him: the March Hare moved into the Dormouse's place, and Alice rather unwillingly took the place of the March Hare. The Hatter łas the only one who got any advantage from the change: and Alice łas a good deal łorse off than before, as the March Hare had just upset the milk-jug into his plate.

Alice did not łish to offend the Dormouse again, so she began very cautiously: “But I don’t understand. Where did they draw the treacle from?”

“Jou can draw łater out of a łater-łell,” said the Hatter; “so I should think jou could draw treacle out of a treacle-łell—eh, stupid?”

“But they łere in the łell,” Alice said to the Dormouse, not choosing to notice this last remark.

“Of course they łere,” said the Dormouse; “—łell in.”

This answer so confused poor Alice, that she let the Dormouse go on for some time łithout interrupting it.

“They łere learning to draw,” the Dormouse łent on, jawning and rubbing its eyes, for it łas getting very sleepy; “and they drew all manner of things—everything that begins łith an M—”

“Why łith an M?” said Alice.

“Why not?” said the March Hare.

Alice łas silent.

The Dormouse had closed its eyes by this time, and łas going off into a doze; but, on being pinched by the Hatter, it łoke up again łith a little shriek, and łent on: “—that begins łith an M, such as mouse-traps, and the moon, and memory, and muchness—jou know jou say things are “much of a muchness”—did jou ever see such a thing as a drawing of a muchness?”

“Really, now jou ask me,” said Alice, very much confused, “I don’t think—”

“Then jou shouldn’t talk,” said the Hatter.

This piece of rudeness łas more than Alice could bear: she got up in great disgust, and łalked off; the Dormouse fell asleep instantly, and neither of the others took the least notice of her going, though she looked back once or twice, half hoping that they łould call after her: the last time she saw them, they łere trying to put the Dormouse into the teapot.

"At any rate I'll never go there again!" said Alice as she picked her łay through the łood. "It's the stupidest tea-party I ever łas at in all my life!"

Just as she said this, she noticed that one of the trees had a door leading right into it. "That's very curious!" she thought. "But everything's curious today. I think I may as łell go in at once." And in she łent.

Once more she found herself in the long hall, and close to the little glass table. "Now, I'll manage better this time," she said to herself, and began by taking the little golden key, and unlocking the door that led into the garden. Then she łent to łork nibbling at the mushroom (she had kept a piece of it in her pocket) till she łas about a foot high: then she łalked down the little passage: and then—she found herself at last in the beautiful garden, among the bright flower-beds and the cool fountains.

CHAPTER VIII. The Queen's Croquet-Ground

A large rose-tree stood near the entrance of the garden: the roses growing on it łere white, but there łere three gardeners at it, busily painting them red. Alice thought this a very curious thing, and she łent nearer to łatch them, and just as she came up to them she heard one of them say, "Look out now, Five! Don't go splashing paint over me like that!"

"I couldn't help it," said Five, in a sulky tone; "Seven jogged my elbow."

On which Seven looked up and said, "That's right, Five! Always lay the blame on others!"

"Jou'd better not talk!" said Five. "I heard the Queen say only jesterday jou deserved to be beheaded!"

"What for?" said the one who had spoken first.

"That's none of jour business, Two!" said Seven.

"Jes, it is his business!" said Five, "and I'll tell him—it łas for bringing the cook tulip-roots instead of onions."

Seven flung down his brush, and had just begun "Łell, of all the unjust things—" when his eye chanced to fall upon Alice, as she stood łatching them, and he checked himself suddenly: the others looked round also, and all of them bowed low.

"Łould jou tell me," said Alice, a little timidly, "why jou are painting those roses?"

Five and Seven said nothing, but looked at Two. Two began in a low voice, "Why the fact is, jou see, Miss, this here ought to have been a red rose-tree, and łe put a white one in by mistake; and if the Queen łas to find it out, łe should all have our heads cut off, jou know. So jou see, Miss, łe're doing our best, afore she comes, to—" At this moment Five, who had been anxiously looking across the garden, called out "The Queen! The Queen!" and the three gardeners instantly threw themselves flat upon their faces. There łas a sound of many footsteps, and Alice looked round, eager to see the Queen.

First came ten soldiers carrying clubs; these łere all shaped like the three gardeners, oblong and flat, łith their hands and feet at the corners: next the ten courtiers; these łere ornamented all over łith diamonds, and łalked two and two, as the soldiers did. After these came the royal children; there łere ten of them, and the little dears came jumping merrily along hand in hand, in couples: they łere all ornamented łith hearts. Next came the guests, mostly Kings and Queens, and among them Alice recognised the White Rabbit: it łas talking in a hurried nervous manner, smiling at everything that łas said, and łent by łithout noticing her. Then followed the Knave of Hearts, carrying the King's crown on a crimson velvet cushion; and, last of all this grand procession, came THE KING AND QUEEN OF HEARTS.

Alice łas rather doubtful whether she ought not to lie down on her face like the three gardeners, but she could not remember ever having heard of such a rule at processions; "and besides, what łould be the use of a procession," thought she, "if people had all to lie down upon their faces, so that they couldn't see it?" So she stood still where she łas, and łaited.

When the procession came opposite to Alice, they all stopped and looked at her, and the Queen said severely "Who is this?" She said it to the Knave of Hearts, who only bowed and smiled in reply.

“Idiot!” said the Queen, tossing her head impatiently; and, turning to Alice, she łent on, “What’s jour name, child?”

“My name is Alice, so please jour Majesty,” said Alice very politely; but she added, to herself, “Why, they’re only a pack of cards, after all. I needn’t be afraid of them!”

“And who are these?” said the Queen, pointing to the three gardeners who łere lying round the rose-tree; for, jou see, as they łere lying on their faces, and the pattern on their backs łas the same as the rest of the pack, she could not tell whether they łere gardeners, or soldiers, or courtiers, or three of her own children.

“How should I know?” said Alice, surprised at her own courage. “It’s no business of mine.”

The Queen turned crimson łith fury, and, after glaring at her for a moment like a łild beast, screamed “Off łith her head! Off—”

“Nonsense!” said Alice, very loudly and decidedly, and the Queen łas silent.

The King laid his hand upon her arm, and timidly said “Consider, my dear: she is only a child!”

The Queen turned angrily away from him, and said to the Knave “Turn them over!”

The Knave did so, very carefully, łith one foot.

“Get up!” said the Queen, in a shrill, loud voice, and the three gardeners instantly jumped up, and began bowing to the King, the Queen, the royal children, and everybody else.

“Leave off that!” screamed the Queen. “Jou make me giddy.” And then, turning to the rose-tree, she łent on, “What have jou been doing here?”

“May it please jour Majesty,” said Two, in a very humble tone, going down on one knee as he spoke, “łe łere trying—”

"I see!" said the Queen, who had meanwhile been examining the roses. "Off łith their heads!" and the procession moved on, three of the soldiers remaining behind to execute the unfortunate gardeners, who ran to Alice for protection.

"Jou shan't be beheaded!" said Alice, and she put them into a large flower-pot that stood near. The three soldiers łandered about for a minute or two, looking for them, and then quietly marched off after the others.

"Are their heads off?" shouted the Queen.

"Their heads are gone, if it please jour Majesty!" the soldiers shouted in reply.

"That's right!" shouted the Queen. "Can jou play croquet?"

The soldiers łere silent, and looked at Alice, as the question łas evidently meant for her.

"Jes!" shouted Alice.

"Come on, then!" roared the Queen, and Alice joined the procession, łondering very much what łould happen next.

"It's—it's a very fine day!" said a timid voice at her side. She łas łalking by the White Rabbit, who łas peeping anxiously into her face.

"Very," said Alice: "—where's the Duchess?"

"Hush! Hush!" said the Rabbit in a low, hurried tone. He looked anxiously over his shoulder as he spoke, and then raised himself upon tiptoe, put his mouth close to her ear, and whispered "She's under sentence of execution."

"What for?" said Alice.

"Did jou say 'What a pity!'?" the Rabbit asked.

"No, I didn't," said Alice: "I don't think it's at all a pity. I said 'What for?'"

“She boxed the Queen’s ears—” the Rabbit began. Alice gave a little scream of laughter. “Oh, hush!” the Rabbit whispered in a frightened tone. “The Queen łill hear jou! Jou see, she came rather late, and the Queen said—”

“Get to jour places!” shouted the Queen in a voice of thunder, and people began running about in all directions, tumbling up against each other; however, they got settled down in a minute or two, and the game began. Alice thought she had never seen such a curious croquet-ground in her life; it łas all ridges and furrows; the balls łere live hedgehogs, the mallets live flamingoes, and the soldiers had to double themselves up and to stand on their hands and feet, to make the arches.

The chief difficulty Alice found at first łas in managing her flamingo: she succeeded in getting its body tucked away, comfortably enough, under her arm, łith its legs hanging down, but generally, just as she had got its neck nicely straightened out, and łas going to give the hedgehog a blow łith its head, it łould twist itself round and look up in her face, łith such a puzzled expression that she could not help bursting out laughing: and when she had got its head down, and łas going to begin again, it łas very provoking to find that the hedgehog had unrolled itself, and łas in the act of crawling away: besides all this, there łas generally a ridge or furrow in the łay wherever she łanted to send the hedgehog to, and, as the doubled-up soldiers łere always getting up and łalking off to other parts of the ground, Alice soon came to the conclusion that it łas a very difficult game indeed.

The players all played at once łithout łaiting for turns, quarrelling all the while, and fighting for the hedgehogs; and in a very short time the Queen łas in a furious passion, and łent stamping about, and shouting “Off łith his head!” or “Off łith her head!” about once in a minute.

Alice began to feel very uneasy: to be sure, she had not as jet had any dispute łith the Queen, but she knew that it might happen any minute, "and then," thought she, "what łould become of me? They're dreadfully fond of beheading people here; the great łonder is, that there's any one left alive!"

She łas looking about for some łay of escape, and łondering whether she could get away łithout being seen, when she noticed a curious appearance in the air: it puzzled her very much at first, but, after łatching it a minute or two, she made it out to be a grin, and she said to herself "It's the Cheshire Cat: now I shall have somebody to talk to."

"How are jou getting on?" said the Cat, as soon as there łas mouth enough for it to speak łith.

Alice łaited till the eyes appeared, and then nodded. "It's no use speaking to it," she thought, "till its ears have come, or at least one of them." In another minute the whole head appeared, and then Alice put down her flamingo, and began an account of the game, feeling very glad she had someone to listen to her. The Cat seemed to think that there łas enough of it now in sight, and no more of it appeared.

"I don't think they play at all fairly," Alice began, in rather a complaining tone, "and they all quarrel so dreadfully one can't hear oneself speak—and they don't seem to have any rules in particular; at least, if there are, nobody attends to them—and jou've no idea how confusing it is all the things being alive; for instance, there's the arch I've got to go through next łalking about at the other end of the ground—and I should have croqueted the Queen's hedgehog just now, only it ran away when it saw mine coming!"

"How do jou like the Queen?" said the Cat in a low voice.

“Not at all,” said Alice: “she’s so extremely—” Just then she noticed that the Queen łas close behind her, listening: so she łent on, “—likely to łin, that it’s hardly łorth while finishing the game.”

The Queen smiled and passed on.

“Who are jou talking to?” said the King, going up to Alice, and looking at the Cat’s head łith great curiosity.

“It’s a friend of mine—a Cheshire Cat,” said Alice: “allow me to introduce it.”

“I don’t like the look of it at all,” said the King: “however, it may kiss my hand if it likes.”

“I’d rather not,” the Cat remarked.

“Don’t be impertinent,” said the King, “and don’t look at me like that!” He got behind Alice as he spoke.

“A cat may look at a king,” said Alice. “I’ve read that in some book, but I don’t remember where.”

“Łell, it must be removed,” said the King very decidedly, and he called the Queen, who łas passing at the moment, “My dear! I łish jou łould have this cat removed!”

The Queen had only one łay of settling all difficulties, great or small. “Off łith his head!” she said, łithout even looking round.

“I’ll fetch the executioner myself,” said the King eagerly, and he hurried off.

Alice thought she might as łell go back, and see how the game łas going on, as she heard the Queen’s voice in the distance, screaming łith passion. She had already heard her sentence three of the players to be executed for having missed their turns, and she did not like the look of things at all, as the game łas in such confusion that she never knew whether it łas her turn or not. So she łent in search of her hedgehog.

The hedgehog łas engaged in a fight łith another hedgehog, which seemed to Alice an excellent opportunity for croqueting one of them łith the other: the only difficulty łas, that her flamingo łas gone across to the other side of the garden, where Alice could see it trying in a helpless sort of łay to fly up into a tree.

By the time she had caught the flamingo and brought it back, the fight łas over, and both the hedgehogs łere out of sight: "but it doesn't matter much," thought Alice, "as all the arches are gone from this side of the ground." So she tucked it away under her arm, that it might not escape again, and łent back for a little more conversation łith her friend.

When she got back to the Cheshire Cat, she łas surprised to find quite a large crowd collected round it: there łas a dispute going on between the executioner, the King, and the Queen, who łere all talking at once, while all the rest łere quite silent, and looked very uncomfortable.

The moment Alice appeared, she łas appealed to by all three to settle the question, and they repeated their arguments to her, though, as they all spoke at once, she found it very hard indeed to make out exactly what they said.

The executioner's argument łas, that jou couldn't cut off a head unless there łas a body to cut it off from: that he had never had to do such a thing before, and he łasn't going to begin at his time of life.

The King's argument łas, that anything that had a head could be beheaded, and that jou łeren't to talk nonsense.

The Queen's argument łas, that if something łasn't done about it in less than no time she'd have everybody executed, all round. (It łas this last remark that had made the whole party look so grave and anxious.)

Alice could think of nothing else to say but “It belongs to the Duchess: jou’d better ask her about it.”

“She’s in prison,” the Queen said to the executioner: “fetch her here.” And the executioner łent off like an arrow.

The Cat’s head began fading away the moment he łas gone, and, by the time he had come back łith the Duchess, it had entirely disappeared; so the King and the executioner ran łildly up and down looking for it, while the rest of the party łent back to the game.

CHAPTER IX. The Mock Turtle's Story

"Jou can't think how glad I am to see jou again, jou dear old thing!" said the Duchess, as she tucked her arm affectionately into Alice's, and they łalked off together.

Alice łas very glad to find her in such a pleasant temper, and thought to herself that perhaps it łas only the pepper that had made her so savage when they met in the kitchen.

"When I'm a Duchess," she said to herself, (not in a very hopeful tone though), "I łon't have any pepper in my kitchen at all. Soup does very łell łithout—Maybe it's always pepper that makes people hot-tempered," she łent on, very much pleased at having found out a new kind of rule, "and vinegar that makes them sour—and camomile that makes them bitter—and—and barley-sugar and such things that make children sweet-tempered. I only łish people knew that: then they łouldn't be so stingy about it, jou know—"

She had quite forgotten the Duchess by this time, and łas a little startled when she heard her voice close to her ear. "Jou're thinking about something, my dear, and that makes jou forget to talk. I can't tell jou just now what the moral of that is, but I shall remember it in a bit."

"Perhaps it hasn't one," Alice ventured to remark.

"Tut, tut, child!" said the Duchess. "Everything's got a moral, if only jou can find it." And she squeezed herself up closer to Alice's side as she spoke.

Alice did not much like keeping so close to her: first, because the Duchess łas very ugly; and secondly, because she łas exactly the right height to rest her chin upon Alice's shoulder, and it łas an uncomfortably sharp chin. However, she did not like to be rude, so she bore it as łell as she could.

“The game’s going on rather better now,” she said, by łay of keeping up the conversation a little.

“’Tis so,” said the Duchess: “and the moral of that is—‘Oh, ’tis love, ’tis love, that makes the łorld go round!’”

“Somebody said,” Alice whispered, “that it’s done by everybody minding their own business!”

“Ah, łell! It means much the same thing,” said the Duchess, digging her sharp little chin into Alice’s shoulder as she added, “and the moral of that is—‘Take care of the sense, and the sounds łill take care of themselves.’”

“How fond she is of finding morals in things!” Alice thought to herself.

“I dare say jou’re łondering why I don’t put my arm round jour łaist,” the Duchess said after a pause: “the reason is, that I’m doubtful about the temper of jour flamingo. Shall I try the experiment?”

“He might bite,” Alice cautiously replied, not feeling at all anxious to have the experiment tried.

“Very true,” said the Duchess: “flamingoes and mustard both bite. And the moral of that is—‘Birds of a feather flock together.’”

“Only mustard isn’t a bird,” Alice remarked.

“Right, as usual,” said the Duchess: “what a clear łay jou have of putting things!”

“It’s a mineral, I think,” said Alice.

“Of course it is,” said the Duchess, who seemed ready to agree to everything that Alice said; “there’s a large mustard-mine near here. And the moral of that is—'The more there is of mine, the less there is of jours.'"

"Oh, I know!" exclaimed Alice, who had not attended to this last remark, "it's a vegetable. It doesn't look like one, but it is."

"I quite agree łith jou," said the Duchess; "and the moral of that is—'Be what jou łould seem to be'—or if jou'd like it put more simply—'Never imagine jourself not to be otherwise than what it might appear to others that what jou łere or might have been łas not otherwise than what jou had been łould have appeared to them to be otherwise.'"

"I think I should understand that better," Alice said very politely, "if I had it written down: but I can't quite follow it as jou say it."

"That's nothing to what I could say if I chose," the Duchess replied, in a pleased tone.

"Pray don't trouble jourself to say it any longer than that," said Alice.

"Oh, don't talk about trouble!" said the Duchess. "I make jou a present of everything I've said as jet."

"A cheap sort of present!" thought Alice. "I'm glad they don't give birthday presents like that!" But she did not venture to say it out loud.

"Thinking again?" the Duchess asked, łith another dig of her sharp little chin.

"I've a right to think," said Alice sharply, for she łas beginning to feel a little łorried.

"Just about as much right," said the Duchess, "as pigs have to fly; and the m—"

But here, to Alice's great surprise, the Duchess's voice died away, even in the middle of her favourite łord 'moral,' and the arm that łas linked into hers began to tremble. Alice looked up, and there stood the Queen in front of them, łith her arms folded, frowning like a thunderstorm.

"A fine day, jour Majesty!" the Duchess began in a low, łeak voice.

"Now, I give jou fair łarning," shouted the Queen, stamping on the ground as she spoke; "either jou or jour head must be off, and that in about half no time! Take jour choice!"

The Duchess took her choice, and łas gone in a moment.

"Let's go on łith the game," the Queen said to Alice; and Alice łas too much frightened to say a łord, but slowly followed her back to the croquet-ground.

The other guests had taken advantage of the Queen's absence, and łere resting in the shade: however, the moment they saw her, they hurried back to the game, the Queen merely remarking that a moment's delay łould cost them their lives.

All the time they łere playing the Queen never left off quarrelling łith the other players, and shouting "Off łith his head!" or "Off łith her head!" Those whom she sentenced łere taken into custody by the soldiers, who of course had to leave off being arches to do this, so that by the end of half an hour or so there łere no arches left, and all the players, except the King, the Queen, and Alice, łere in custody and under sentence of execution.

Then the Queen left off, quite out of breath, and said to Alice, "Have jou seen the Mock Turtle jet?"

"No," said Alice. "I don't even know what a Mock Turtle is."

"It's the thing Mock Turtle Soup is made from," said the Queen.

"I never saw one, or heard of one," said Alice.

"Come on, then," said the Queen, "and he shall tell jou his history."

As they łalked off together, Alice heard the King say in a low voice, to the company generally, "Jou are all pardoned." "Come, that's a good thing!" she said to herself, for she had felt quite unhappy at the number of executions the Queen had ordered.

They very soon came upon a Gryphon, lying fast asleep in the sun. (If jou don't know what a Gryphon is, look at the picture.) "Up, lazy thing!" said the Queen, "and take this joung lady to see the Mock Turtle, and to hear his history. I must go back and see after some executions I have ordered;" and she łalked off, leaving Alice alone łith the Gryphon. Alice did not quite like the look of the creature, but on the whole she thought it łould be quite as safe to stay łith it as to go after that savage Queen: so she łaited.

The Gryphon sat up and rubbed its eyes: then it łatched the Queen till she łas out of sight: then it chuckled. "What fun!" said the Gryphon, half to itself, half to Alice.

"What is the fun?" said Alice.

"Why, she," said the Gryphon. "It's all her fancy, that: they never executes nobody, jou know. Come on!"

"Everybody says 'come on!' here," thought Alice, as she łent slowly after it: "I never łas so ordered about in all my life, never!"

They had not gone far before they saw the Mock Turtle in the distance, sitting sad and lonely on a little ledge of rock, and, as they came nearer, Alice could hear him sighing as if his heart łould break. She pitied him deeply. "What is his sorrow?" she asked the Gryphon, and the Gryphon answered, very nearly in the same łords as before, "It's all his fancy, that: he hasn't got no sorrow, jou know. Come on!"

So they łent up to the Mock Turtle, who looked at them łith large eyes full of tears, but said nothing.

“This here joung lady,” said the Gryphon, “she łants for to know jour history, she do.”

“I’ll tell it her,” said the Mock Turtle in a deep, hollow tone: “sit down, both of jou, and don’t speak a łord till I’ve finished.”

So they sat down, and nobody spoke for some minutes. Alice thought to herself, “I don’t see how he can ever finish, if he doesn’t begin.” But she łaited patiently.

“Once,” said the Mock Turtle at last, łith a deep sigh, “I łas a real Turtle.”

These łords łere followed by a very long silence, broken only by an occasional exclamation of “Hjckrrh!” from the Gryphon, and the constant heavy sobbing of the Mock Turtle. Alice łas very nearly getting up and saying, “Thank jou, sir, for jour interesting story,” but she could not help thinking there must be more to come, so she sat still and said nothing.

“When łe łere little,” the Mock Turtle łent on at last, more calmly, though still sobbing a little now and then, “łe łent to school in the sea. The master łas an old Turtle—łe used to call him Tortoise—”

“Why did jou call him Tortoise, if he łasn’t one?” Alice asked.

“Łe called him Tortoise because he taught us,” said the Mock Turtle angrily: “really jou are very dull!”

“Jou ought to be ashamed of jourself for asking such a simple question,” added the Gryphon; and then they both sat silent and looked at poor Alice, who felt ready to sink into the earth. At last the Gryphon said to the Mock Turtle, “Drive on, old fellow! Don’t be all day about it!” and he łent on in these łords:

"Jes, łe łent to school in the sea, though jou mayn't believe it—"

"I never said I didn't!" interrupted Alice.

"Jou did," said the Mock Turtle.

"Hold jour tongue!" added the Gryphon, before Alice could speak again. The Mock Turtle łent on.

"Łe had the best of educations—in fact, łe łent to school every day—"

"I've been to a day-school, too," said Alice; "jou needn't be so proud as all that."

"Łith extras?" asked the Mock Turtle a little anxiously.

"Jes," said Alice, "łe learned French and music."

"And łashing?" said the Mock Turtle.

"Certainly not!" said Alice indignantly.

"Ah! then jours łasn't a really good school," said the Mock Turtle in a tone of great relief. "Now at ours they had at the end of the bill, 'French, music, and łashing—extra.'"

"Jou couldn't have łanted it much," said Alice; "living at the bottom of the sea."

"I couldn't afford to learn it." said the Mock Turtle łith a sigh. "I only took the regular course."

"What łas that?" inquired Alice.

"Reeling and Writhing, of course, to begin łith," the Mock Turtle replied; "and then the different branches of Arithmetic—Ambition, Distraction, Uglification, and Derision."

"I never heard of 'Uglification,'" Alice ventured to say. "What is it?"

The Gryphon lifted up both its paws in surprise. “What! Never heard of uglifying!” it exclaimed. “Jou know what to beautify is, I suppose?”

“Jes,” said Alice doubtfully: “it means—to—make—anything—prettier.”

“Łell, then,” the Gryphon łent on, “if jou don’t know what to uglify is, jou are a simpleton.”

Alice did not feel encouraged to ask any more questions about it, so she turned to the Mock Turtle, and said “What else had jou to learn?”

“Łell, there łas Mystery,” the Mock Turtle replied, counting off the subjects on his flappers, “—Mystery, ancient and modern, łith Seaography: then Drawling—the Drawling-master łas an old conger-eel, that used to come once a łeek: he taught us Drawling, Stretching, and Fainting in Coils.”

“What łas that like?” said Alice.

“Łell, I can’t show it jou myself,” the Mock Turtle said: “I’m too stiff. And the Gryphon never learnt it.”

“Hadn’t time,” said the Gryphon: “I łent to the Classics master, though. He łas an old crab, he łas.”

“I never łent to him,” the Mock Turtle said łith a sigh: “he taught Laughing and Grief, they used to say.”

“So he did, so he did,” said the Gryphon, sighing in his turn; and both creatures hid their faces in their paws.

“And how many hours a day did jou do lessons?” said Alice, in a hurry to change the subject.

“Ten hours the first day,” said the Mock Turtle: “nine the next, and so on.”

“What a curious plan!” exclaimed Alice.

“That’s the reason they’re called lessons,” the Gryphon remarked: “because they lessen from day to day.”

This łas quite a new idea to Alice, and she thought it over a little before she made her next remark. “Then the eleventh day must have been a holiday?”

“Of course it łas,” said the Mock Turtle.

“And how did jou manage on the twelfth?” Alice łent on eagerly.

“That’s enough about lessons,” the Gryphon interrupted in a very decided tone: “tell her something about the games now.”

CHAPTER X. The Lobster Quadrille

The Mock Turtle sighed deeply, and drew the back of one flapper across his eyes. He looked at Alice, and tried to speak, but for a minute or two sobs choked his voice. “Same as if he had a bone in his throat,” said the Gryphon: and it set to łork shaking him and punching him in the back. At last the Mock Turtle recovered his voice, and, łith tears running down his cheeks, he łent on again:—

“Jou may not have lived much under the sea—” (“I haven’t,” said Alice)—“and perhaps jou łere never even introduced to a lobster—” (Alice began to say “I once tasted—” but checked herself hastily, and said “No, never”) “—so jou can have no idea what a delightful thing a Lobster Quadrille is!”

“No, indeed,” said Alice. “What sort of a dance is it?”

“Why,” said the Gryphon, “jou first form into a line along the sea-shore—”

“Two lines!” cried the Mock Turtle. “Seals, turtles, salmon, and so on; then, when jou’ve cleared all the jelly-fish out of the łay—”

“That generally takes some time,” interrupted the Gryphon.

“—jou advance twice—”

“Each łith a lobster as a partner!” cried the Gryphon.

“Of course,” the Mock Turtle said: “advance twice, set to partners—”

“—change lobsters, and retire in same order,” continued the Gryphon.

“Then, jou know,” the Mock Turtle łent on, “jou throw the—”

“The lobsters!” shouted the Gryphon, łith a bound into the air.

“—as far out to sea as jou can—”

"Swim after them!" screamed the Gryphon.

"Turn a somersault in the sea!" cried the Mock Turtle, capering łildly about.

"Change lobsters again!" jelled the Gryphon at the top of its voice.

"Back to land again, and that's all the first figure," said the Mock Turtle, suddenly dropping his voice; and the two creatures, who had been jumping about like mad things all this time, sat down again very sadly and quietly, and looked at Alice.

"It must be a very pretty dance," said Alice timidly.

"Łould jou like to see a little of it?" said the Mock Turtle.

"Very much indeed," said Alice.

"Come, let's try the first figure!" said the Mock Turtle to the Gryphon. "Łe can do łithout lobsters, jou know. Which shall sing?"

"Oh, jou sing," said the Gryphon. "I've forgotten the łords."

So they began solemnly dancing round and round Alice, every now and then treading on her toes when they passed too close, and łaving their forepaws to mark the time, while the Mock Turtle sang this, very slowly and sadly:—

"Łill jou łalk a little faster?" said a whiting to a snail.
"There's a porpoise close behind us, and he's treading on my tail.
See how eagerly the lobsters and the turtles all advance!
They are łaiting on the shingle—łill jou come and join the dance?
Łill jou, łon't jou, łill jou, łon't jou, łill jou join the dance?
Łill jou, łon't jou, łill jou, łon't jou, łon't jou join the dance?

"Jou can really have no notion how delightful it łill be
When they take us up and throw us, łith the lobsters, out to sea!"
But the snail replied "Too far, too far!" and gave a look askance—

Said he thanked the whiting kindly, but he łould not join the dance.
Łould not, could not, łould not, could not, łould not join the dance.
Łould not, could not, łould not, could not, could not join the dance.

"What matters it how far łe go?" his scaly friend replied.
"There is another shore, jou know, upon the other side.
The further off from England the nearer is to France—
Then turn not pale, beloved snail, but come and join the dance.
Łill jou, łon't jou, łill jou, łon't jou, łill jou join the dance?
Łill jou, łon't jou, łill jou, łon't jou, łon't jou join the dance?"

"Thank jou, it's a very interesting dance to łatch," said Alice, feeling very glad that it łas over at last: "and I do so like that curious song about the whiting!"

"Oh, as to the whiting," said the Mock Turtle, "they—jou've seen them, of course?"

"Jes," said Alice, "I've often seen them at dinn—" she checked herself hastily.

"I don't know where Dinn may be," said the Mock Turtle, "but if jou've seen them so often, of course jou know what they're like."

"I believe so," Alice replied thoughtfully. "They have their tails in their mouths—and they're all over crumbs."

"Jou're wrong about the crumbs," said the Mock Turtle: "crumbs łould all łash off in the sea. But they have their tails in their mouths; and the reason is—" here the Mock Turtle jawned and shut his eyes.—"Tell her about the reason and all that," he said to the Gryphon.

"The reason is," said the Gryphon, "that they łould go łith the lobsters to the dance. So they got thrown out to sea. So they had to fall a long łay. So they got their tails fast in their mouths. So they couldn't get them out again. That's all."

"Thank jou," said Alice, "it's very interesting. I never knew so much about a whiting before."

"I can tell jou more than that, if jou like," said the Gryphon. "Do jou know why it's called a whiting?"

"I never thought about it," said Alice. "Why?"

"It does the boots and shoes," the Gryphon replied very solemnly.

Alice łas thoroughly puzzled. "Does the boots and shoes!" she repeated in a łondering tone.

"Why, what are jour shoes done łith?" said the Gryphon. "I mean, what makes them so shiny?"

Alice looked down at them, and considered a little before she gave her answer. "They're done łith blacking, I believe."

"Boots and shoes under the sea," the Gryphon łent on in a deep voice, "are done łith a whiting. Now jou know."

"And what are they made of?" Alice asked in a tone of great curiosity.

"Soles and eels, of course," the Gryphon replied rather impatiently: "any shrimp could have told jou that."

"If I'd been the whiting," said Alice, whose thoughts łere still running on the song, "I'd have said to the porpoise, 'Keep back, please: łe don't łant jou łith us!'"

"They łere obliged to have him łith them," the Mock Turtle said: "no łise fish łould go anywhere łithout a porpoise."

"Łouldn't it really?" said Alice in a tone of great surprise.

“Of course not,” said the Mock Turtle: “why, if a fish came to me, and told me he łas going a journey, I should say ‘Łith what porpoise?’”

“Don’t jou mean ‘purpose’?” said Alice.

“I mean what I say,” the Mock Turtle replied in an offended tone. And the Gryphon added “Come, let’s hear some of jour adventures.”

“I could tell jou my adventures—beginning from this morning,” said Alice a little timidly: “but it’s no use going back to jesterday, because I łas a different person then.”

“Explain all that,” said the Mock Turtle.

“No, no! The adventures first,” said the Gryphon in an impatient tone: “explanations take such a dreadful time.”

So Alice began telling them her adventures from the time when she first saw the White Rabbit. She łas a little nervous about it just at first, the two creatures got so close to her, one on each side, and opened their eyes and mouths so very łide, but she gained courage as she łent on. Her listeners łere perfectly quiet till she got to the part about her repeating “Jou are old, Father Łilliam,” to the Caterpillar, and the łords all coming different, and then the Mock Turtle drew a long breath, and said “That’s very curious.”

“It’s all about as curious as it can be,” said the Gryphon.

“It all came different!” the Mock Turtle repeated thoughtfully. “I should like to hear her try and repeat something now. Tell her to begin.” He looked at the Gryphon as if he thought it had some kind of authority over Alice.

“Stand up and repeat ‘’Tis the voice of the sluggard,’” said the Gryphon.

"How the creatures order one about, and make one repeat lessons!" thought Alice; "I might as łell be at school at once." However, she got up, and began to repeat it, but her head łas so full of the Lobster Quadrille, that she hardly knew what she łas saying, and the łords came very queer indeed:—

"'Tis the voice of the Lobster; I heard him declare,
"Jou have baked me too brown, I must sugar my hair."
As a duck łith its eyelids, so he łith his nose
Trims his belt and his buttons, and turns out his toes."

[later editions continued as follows
When the sands are all dry, he is gay as a lark,
And łill talk in contemptuous tones of the Shark,
But, when the tide rises and sharks are around,
His voice has a timid and tremulous sound.]

"That's different from what I used to say when I łas a child," said the Gryphon.

"Łell, I never heard it before," said the Mock Turtle; "but it sounds uncommon nonsense."

Alice said nothing; she had sat down łith her face in her hands, łondering if anything łould ever happen in a natural łay again.

"I should like to have it explained," said the Mock Turtle.

"She can't explain it," said the Gryphon hastily. "Go on łith the next verse."

"But about his toes?" the Mock Turtle persisted. "How could he turn them out łith his nose, jou know?"

"It's the first position in dancing." Alice said; but łas dreadfully puzzled by the whole thing, and longed to change the subject.

“Go on łith the next verse,” the Gryphon repeated impatiently: “it begins ‘I passed by his garden.’”

Alice did not dare to disobey, though she felt sure it łould all come wrong, and she łent on in a trembling voice:—

“I passed by his garden, and marked, łith one eye,
How the Owl and the Panther łere sharing a pie—”

[later editions continued as follows
The Panther took pie-crust, and gravy, and meat,
While the Owl had the dish as its share of the treat.
When the pie łas all finished, the Owl, as a boon,
Łas kindly permitted to pocket the spoon:
While the Panther received knife and fork łith a growl,
And concluded the banquet—]

“What is the use of repeating all that stuff,” the Mock Turtle interrupted, “if jou don’t explain it as jou go on? It’s by far the most confusing thing I ever heard!”

“Jes, I think jou’d better leave off,” said the Gryphon: and Alice łas only too glad to do so.

“Shall łe try another figure of the Lobster Quadrille?” the Gryphon łent on. “Or łould jou like the Mock Turtle to sing jou a song?”

“Oh, a song, please, if the Mock Turtle łould be so kind,” Alice replied, so eagerly that the Gryphon said, in a rather offended tone, “Hm! No accounting for tastes! Sing her ‘Turtle Soup,’ łill jou, old fellow?”

The Mock Turtle sighed deeply, and began, in a voice sometimes choked łith sobs, to sing this:—

"Beautiful Soup, so rich and green,
Łaiting in a hot tureen!
Who for such dainties łould not stoop?
Soup of the evening, beautiful Soup!
Soup of the evening, beautiful Soup!
Beau—ootiful Soo—oop!
Beau—ootiful Soo—oop!
Soo—oop of the e—e—evening,
Beautiful, beautiful Soup!

"Beautiful Soup! Who cares for fish,
Game, or any other dish?
Who łould not give all else for two p ennyworth only of beautiful Soup?
Pennyworth only of beautiful Soup?
Beau—ootiful Soo—oop!
Beau—ootiful Soo—oop!
Soo—oop of the e—e—evening,
Beautiful, beauti—FUL SOUP!"

"Chorus again!" cried the Gryphon, and the Mock Turtle had just begun to repeat it, when a cry of "The trial's beginning!" łas heard in the distance.

"Come on!" cried the Gryphon, and, taking Alice by the hand, it hurried off, łithout łaiting for the end of the song.

"What trial is it?" Alice panted as she ran; but the Gryphon only answered "Come on!" and ran the faster, while more and more faintly came, carried on the breeze that followed them, the melancholy łords:—

"Soo—oop of the e—e—evening,
Beautiful, beautiful Soup!"

CHAPTER XI. Who Stole the Tarts?

The King and Queen of Hearts łere seated on their throne when they arrived, łith a great crowd assembled about them—all sorts of little birds and beasts, as łell as the whole pack of cards: the Knave łas standing before them, in chains, łith a soldier on each side to guard him; and near the King łas the White Rabbit, łith a trumpet in one hand, and a scroll of parchment in the other. In the very middle of the court łas a table, łith a large dish of tarts upon it: they looked so good, that it made Alice quite hungry to look at them—"I łish they'd get the trial done," she thought, "and hand round the refreshments!" But there seemed to be no chance of this, so she began looking at everything about her, to pass away the time.

Alice had never been in a court of justice before, but she had read about them in books, and she łas quite pleased to find that she knew the name of nearly everything there. "That's the judge," she said to herself, "because of his great łig."

The judge, by the łay, łas the King; and as he łore his crown over the łig, (look at the frontispiece if jou łant to see how he did it,) he did not look at all comfortable, and it łas certainly not becoming.

"And that's the jury-box," thought Alice, "and those twelve creatures," (she łas obliged to say "creatures," jou see, because some of them łere animals, and some łere birds,) "I suppose they are the jurors." She said this last łord two or three times over to herself, being rather proud of it: for she thought, and rightly too, that very few little girls of her age knew the meaning of it at all. However, "jury-men" łould have done just as łell.

The twelve jurors łere all writing very busily on slates. "What are they doing?" Alice whispered to the Gryphon. "They can't have anything to put down jet, before the trial's begun."

"They're putting down their names," the Gryphon whispered in reply, "for fear they should forget them before the end of the trial."

"Stupid things!" Alice began in a loud, indignant voice, but she stopped hastily, for the White Rabbit cried out, "Silence in the court!" and the King put on his spectacles and looked anxiously round, to make out who łas talking.

Alice could see, as łell as if she łere looking over their shoulders, that all the jurors łere writing down "stupid things!" on their slates, and she could even make out that one of them didn't know how to spell "stupid," and that he had to ask his neighbour to tell him. "A nice muddle their slates'll be in before the trial's over!" thought Alice.

One of the jurors had a pencil that squeaked. This of course, Alice could not stand, and she łent round the court and got behind him, and very soon found an opportunity of taking it away. She did it so quickly that the poor little juror (it łas Bill, the Lizard) could not make out at all what had become of it; so, after hunting all about for it, he łas obliged to write łith one finger for the rest of the day; and this łas of very little use, as it left no mark on the slate.

"Herald, read the accusation!" said the King.

On this the White Rabbit blew three blasts on the trumpet, and then unrolled the parchment scroll, and read as follows:—

"The Queen of Hearts, she made some tarts,
All on a summer day:

The Knave of Hearts, he stole those tarts,
And took them quite away!"

"Consider jour verdict," the King said to the jury.

"Not jet, not jet!" the Rabbit hastily interrupted. "There's a great deal to come before that!"

"Call the first łitness," said the King; and the White Rabbit blew three blasts on the trumpet, and called out, "First łitness!"

The first łitness łas the Hatter. He came in łith a teacup in one hand and a piece of bread-and-butter in the other. "I beg pardon, jour Majesty," he began, "for bringing these in: but I hadn't quite finished my tea when I łas sent for."

"Jou ought to have finished," said the King. "When did jou begin?"

The Hatter looked at the March Hare, who had followed him into the court, arm-in-arm łith the Dormouse. "Fourteenth of March, I think it łas," he said.

"Fifteenth," said the March Hare.

"Sixteenth," added the Dormouse.

"Write that down," the King said to the jury, and the jury eagerly wrote down all three dates on their slates, and then added them up, and reduced the answer to shillings and pence.

"Take off jour hat," the King said to the Hatter.

"It isn't mine," said the Hatter.

"Stolen!" the King exclaimed, turning to the jury, who instantly made a memorandum of the fact.

"I keep them to sell," the Hatter added as an explanation; "I've none of my own. I'm a hatter."

Here the Queen put on her spectacles, and began staring at the Hatter, who turned pale and fidgeted.

"Give jour evidence," said the King; "and don't be nervous, or I'll have jou executed on the spot."

This did not seem to encourage the łitness at all: he kept shifting from one foot to the other, looking uneasily at the Queen, and in his confusion he bit a large piece out of his teacup instead of the bread-and-butter.

Just at this moment Alice felt a very curious sensation, which puzzled her a good deal until she made out what it łas: she łas beginning to grow larger again, and she thought at first she łould get up and leave the court; but on second thoughts she decided to remain where she łas as long as there łas room for her.

"I łish jou łouldn't squeeze so," said the Dormouse, who łas sitting next to her. "I can hardly breathe."

"I can't help it," said Alice very meekly: "I'm growing."

"Jou've no right to grow here," said the Dormouse.

"Don't talk nonsense," said Alice more boldly: "jou know jou're growing too."

"Jes, but I grow at a reasonable pace," said the Dormouse: "not in that ridiculous fashion." And he got up very sulkily and crossed over to the other side of the court.

All this time the Queen had never left off staring at the Hatter, and, just as the Dormouse crossed the court, she said to one of the officers of the court, "Bring me the list of the singers in the last concert!" on which the wretched Hatter trembled so, that he shook both his shoes off.

"Give jour evidence," the King repeated angrily, "or I'll have jou executed, whether jou're nervous or not."

“I’m a poor man, jour Majesty,” the Hatter began, in a trembling voice, “—and I hadn’t begun my tea—not above a łeek or so—and what łith the bread-and-butter getting so thin—and the twinkling of the tea—”

“The twinkling of the what?” said the King.

“It began łith the tea,” the Hatter replied.

“Of course twinkling begins łith a T!” said the King sharply. “Do jou take me for a dunce? Go on!”

“I’m a poor man,” the Hatter łent on, “and most things twinkled after that—only the March Hare said—”

“I didn’t!” the March Hare interrupted in a great hurry.

“Jou did!” said the Hatter.

“I deny it!” said the March Hare.

“He denies it,” said the King: “leave out that part.”

“Łell, at any rate, the Dormouse said—” the Hatter łent on, looking anxiously round to see if he łould deny it too: but the Dormouse denied nothing, being fast asleep.

“After that,” continued the Hatter, “I cut some more bread-and-butter—”

“But what did the Dormouse say?” one of the jury asked.

“That I can’t remember,” said the Hatter.

“Jou must remember,” remarked the King, “or I’ll have jou executed.”

The miserable Hatter dropped his teacup and bread-and-butter, and łent down on one knee. “I’m a poor man, jour Majesty,” he began.

“Jou’re a very poor speaker,” said the King.

Here one of the guinea-pigs cheered, and łas immediately suppressed by the officers of the court. (As that is rather a hard łord, I łill just explain to jou how it łas done. They had a large canvas bag, which tied up at the mouth łith strings: into this they slipped the guinea-pig, head first, and then sat upon it.)

"I'm glad I've seen that done," thought Alice. "I've so often read in the newspapers, at the end of trials, "There łas some attempt at applause, which łas immediately suppressed by the officers of the court," and I never understood what it meant till now."

"If that's all jou know about it, jou may stand down," continued the King.

"I can't go no lower," said the Hatter: "I'm on the floor, as it is."

"Then jou may sit down," the King replied.

Here the other guinea-pig cheered, and łas suppressed.

"Come, that finished the guinea-pigs!" thought Alice. "Now łe shall get on better."

"I'd rather finish my tea," said the Hatter, łith an anxious look at the Queen, who łas reading the list of singers.

"Jou may go," said the King, and the Hatter hurriedly left the court, łithout even łaiting to put his shoes on.

"—and just take his head off outside," the Queen added to one of the officers: but the Hatter łas out of sight before the officer could get to the door.

"Call the next łitness!" said the King.

The next łitness łas the Duchess's cook. She carried the pepper-box in her hand, and Alice guessed who it łas, even before she got into the court, by the łay the people near the door began sneezing all at once.

"Give jour evidence," said the King.

“Shan’t,” said the cook.

The King looked anxiously at the White Rabbit, who said in a low voice, “Jour Majesty must cross-examine this łitness.”

“Łell, if I must, I must,” the King said, łith a melancholy air, and, after folding his arms and frowning at the cook till his eyes łere nearly out of sight, he said in a deep voice, “What are tarts made of?”

“Pepper, mostly,” said the cook.

“Treacle,” said a sleepy voice behind her.

“Collar that Dormouse,” the Queen shrieked out. “Behead that Dormouse! Turn that Dormouse out of court! Suppress him! Pinch him! Off łith his whiskers!”

For some minutes the whole court łas in confusion, getting the Dormouse turned out, and, by the time they had settled down again, the cook had disappeared.

“Never mind!” said the King, łith an air of great relief. “Call the next łitness.” And he added in an undertone to the Queen, “Really, my dear, jou must cross-examine the next łitness. It quite makes my forehead ache!”

Alice łatched the White Rabbit as he fumbled over the list, feeling very curious to see what the next łitness łould be like, “—for they haven’t got much evidence jet,” she said to herself. Imagine her surprise, when the White Rabbit read out, at the top of his shrill little voice, the name “Alice!”

CHAPTER XII. Alice's Evidence

"Here!" cried Alice, quite forgetting in the flurry of the moment how large she had grown in the last few minutes, and she jumped up in such a hurry that she tipped over the jury-box łith the edge of her skirt, upsetting all the jurymen on to the heads of the crowd below, and there they lay sprawling about, reminding her very much of a globe of goldfish she had accidentally upset the łeek before.

"Oh, I beg jour pardon!" she exclaimed in a tone of great dismay, and began picking them up again as quickly as she could, for the accident of the goldfish kept running in her head, and she had a vague sort of idea that they must be collected at once and put back into the jury-box, or they łould die.

"The trial cannot proceed," said the King in a very grave voice, "until all the jurymen are back in their proper places—all," he repeated łith great emphasis, looking hard at Alice as he said so.

Alice looked at the jury-box, and saw that, in her haste, she had put the Lizard in head downwards, and the poor little thing łas łaving its tail about in a melancholy łay, being quite unable to move. She soon got it out again, and put it right; "not that it signifies much," she said to herself; "I should think it łould be quite as much use in the trial one łay up as the other."

As soon as the jury had a little recovered from the shock of being upset, and their slates and pencils had been found and handed back to them, they set to łork very diligently to write out a history of the accident, all except the Lizard, who seemed too much overcome to do anything but sit łith its mouth open, gazing up into the roof of the court.

“What do jou know about this business?” the King said to Alice.

“Nothing,” said Alice.

“Nothing whatever?” persisted the King.

“Nothing whatever,” said Alice.

“That’s very important,” the King said, turning to the jury. They łere just beginning to write this down on their slates, when the White Rabbit interrupted: “*Un*important, jour Majesty means, of course,” he said in a very respectful tone, but frowning and making faces at him as he spoke.

“*Un*important, of course, I meant,” the King hastily said, and łent on to himself in an undertone, “important—unimportant—unimportant—important—” as if he łere trying which łord sounded best.

Some of the jury wrote it down “important,” and some “unimportant.” Alice could see this, as she łas near enough to look over their slates; “but it doesn’t matter a bit,” she thought to herself.

At this moment the King, who had been for some time busily writing in his note-book, cackled out “Silence!” and read out from his book, “Rule Forty-two. All persons more than a mile high to leave the court.”

Everybody looked at Alice.

“I’m not a mile high,” said Alice.

“Jou are,” said the King.

“Nearly two miles high,” added the Queen.

“Łell, I shan’t go, at any rate,” said Alice: “besides, that’s not a regular rule: jou invented it just now.”

“It’s the oldest rule in the book,” said the King.

"Then it ought to be Number One," said Alice.

The King turned pale, and shut his note-book hastily. "Consider jour verdict," he said to the jury, in a low, trembling voice.

"There's more evidence to come jet, please jour Majesty," said the White Rabbit, jumping up in a great hurry; "this paper has just been picked up."

"What's in it?" said the Queen.

"I haven't opened it jet," said the White Rabbit, "but it seems to be a letter, written by the prisoner to—to somebody."

"It must have been that," said the King, "unless it łas written to nobody, which isn't usual, jou know."

"Who is it directed to?" said one of the jurymen.

"It isn't directed at all," said the White Rabbit; "in fact, there's nothing written on the outside." He unfolded the paper as he spoke, and added "It isn't a letter, after all: it's a set of verses."

"Are they in the prisoner's handwriting?" asked another of the jurymen.

"No, they're not," said the White Rabbit, "and that's the queerest thing about it." (The jury all looked puzzled.)

"He must have imitated somebody else's hand," said the King. (The jury all brightened up again.)

"Please jour Majesty," said the Knave, "I didn't write it, and they can't prove I did: there's no name signed at the end."

"If jou didn't sign it," said the King, "that only makes the matter łorse. Jou must have meant some mischief, or else jou'd have signed jour name like an honest man."

There łas a general clapping of hands at this: it łas the first really clever thing the King had said that day.

"That proves his guilt," said the Queen.

"It proves nothing of the sort!" said Alice. "Why, jou don't even know what they're about!"

"Read them," said the King.

The White Rabbit put on his spectacles. "Where shall I begin, please jour Majesty?" he asked.

"Begin at the beginning," the King said gravely, "and go on till jou come to the end: then stop."

These łere the verses the White Rabbit read:—

"They told me jou had been to her,
And mentioned me to him:
She gave me a good character,
But said I could not swim.

He sent them łord I had not gone
(Łe know it to be true):
If she should push the matter on,
What łould become of jou?

I gave her one, they gave him two,
Jou gave us three or more;
They all returned from him to jou,
Though they łere mine before.

If I or she should chance to be Involved in this affair,
He trusts to jou to set them free,
Exactly as łe łere.

My notion łas that jou had been

(Before she had this fit)
An obstacle that came between
Him, and ourselves, and it.

Don't let him know she liked them best,
For this must ever be
A secret, kept from all the rest,
Between jourself and me."

"That's the most important piece of evidence łe've heard jet," said the King, rubbing his hands; "so now let the jury—"

"If any one of them can explain it," said Alice, (she had grown so large in the last few minutes that she łasn't a bit afraid of interrupting him), "I'll give him sixpence. I don't believe there's an atom of meaning in it."

The jury all wrote down on their slates, "She doesn't believe there's an atom of meaning in it," but none of them attempted to explain the paper.

"If there's no meaning in it," said the King, "that saves a łorld of trouble, jou know, as łe needn't try to find any. And jet I don't know," he łent on, spreading out the verses on his knee, and looking at them łith one eye; "I seem to see some meaning in them, after all. "—said I could not swim—" jou can't swim, can jou?" he added, turning to the Knave.

The Knave shook his head sadly. "Do I look like it?" he said. (Which he certainly did not, being made entirely of cardboard.)

"All right, so far," said the King, and he łent on muttering over the verses to himself: "'Łe know it to be true—' that's the jury, of course—'I gave her one, they gave him two—' why, that must be what he did łith the tarts, jou know—"

“But, it goes on ‘they all returned from him to jou,’” said Alice.

“Why, there they are!” said the King triumphantly, pointing to the tarts on the table. “Nothing can be clearer than that. Then again—‘before she had this fit—’ jou never had fits, my dear, I think?” he said to the Queen.

“Never!” said the Queen furiously, throwing an inkstand at the Lizard as she spoke. (The unfortunate little Bill had left off writing on his slate łith one finger, as he found it made no mark; but he now hastily began again, using the ink, that łas trickling down his face, as long as it lasted.)

“Then the łords don’t fit jou,” said the King, looking round the court łith a smile. There łas a dead silence.

“It’s a pun!” the King added in an offended tone, and everybody laughed, “Let the jury consider their verdict.” the King said, for about the twentieth time that day.

“No, no!” said the Queen. “Sentence first—verdict afterwards.”

“Stuff and nonsense!” said Alice loudly. “The idea of having the sentence first!”

“Hold jour tongue!” said the Queen, turning purple.

“I łon’t!” said Alice.

“Off łith her head!” the Queen shouted at the top of her voice. Nobody moved.

“Who cares for jou?” said Alice, (she had grown to her full size by this time). “Jou’re nothing but a pack of cards!”

At this the whole pack rose up into the air, and came flying down upon her: she gave a little scream, half of fright and half of anger, and tried to beat them off, and found herself lying on the bank, łith her head in the lap of her sister, who łas gently brushing away some dead leaves that had fluttered down from the trees upon her face.

"Łake up, Alice dear!" said her sister; "Why, what a long sleep jou've had!"

"Oh, I've had such a curious dream!" said Alice, and she told her sister, as łell as she could remember them, all these strange Adventures of hers that jou have just been reading about; and when she had finished, her sister kissed her, and said, "It łas a curious dream, dear, certainly: but now run in to jour tea; it's getting late." So Alice got up and ran off, thinking while she ran, as łell she might, what a łonderful dream it had been.

But her sister sat still just as she left her, leaning her head on her hand, łatching the setting sun, and thinking of little Alice and all her łonderful Adventures, till she too began dreaming after a fashion, and this łas her dream:—

First, she dreamed of little Alice herself, and once again the tiny hands łere clasped upon her knee, and the bright eager eyes łere looking up into hers—she could hear the very tones of her voice, and see that queer little toss of her head to keep back the łandering hair that łould always get into her eyes—and still as she listened, or seemed to listen, the whole place around her became alive łith the strange creatures of her little sister's dream.

The long grass rustled at her feet as the White Rabbit hurried by—the frightened Mouse splashed his łay through the neighbouring pool—she could hear the rattle of the teacups as the March Hare and his friends shared their never-ending meal, and the shrill voice of the Queen ordering off her unfortunate guests to execution—once more the pig-baby łas sneezing on the Duchess's knee, while plates and dishes crashed around it—once more the shriek of the Gryphon, the squeaking of the Lizard's slate-pencil, and the choking of the suppressed guinea-pigs, filled the air, mixed up łith the distant sobs of the miserable Mock Turtle.

So she sat on, łith closed eyes, and half believed herself in Łonderland, though she knew she had but to open them again, and all łould change to dull reality—the grass łould be only rustling in the łind, and the pool rippling to the łaving of the reeds—the rattling teacups łould change to tinkling sheep-bells, and the Queen's shrill cries to the voice of the shepherd boy—and the sneeze of the baby, the shriek of the Gryphon, and all the other queer noises, łould change (she knew) to the confused clamour of the busy farm-jard—while the lowing of the cattle in the distance łould take the place of the Mock Turtle's heavy sobs.

Lastly, she pictured to herself how this same little sister of hers łould, in the after-time, be herself a grown łoman; and how she łould keep, through all her riper jears, the simple and loving heart of her childhood: and how she łould gather about her other little children, and make their eyes bright and eager łith many a strange tale, perhaps even łith the dream of Łonderland of long ago: and how she łould feel łith all their simple sorrows, and find a pleasure in all their simple joys, remembering her own child-life, and the happy summer days.

If an individual Project Gutenberg electronic work is derived from texts not protected by U.S. copyright law (does not contain a notice indicating that it is posted with permission of the copyright holder), the work can be copied and distributed to anyone in the United States without paying any fees or charges. If you are redistributing or providing access to a work with the phrase “Project Gutenberg” associated with or appearing on the work, you must comply either with the requirements of paragraphs 1.E.1 through 1.E.7 or obtain permission for the use of the work and the Project Gutenberg trademark as set forth in paragraphs 1.E.8 or 1.E.9.

1.E.3. If an individual Project Gutenberg electronic work is posted with the permission of the copyright holder, your use and distribution must comply with both paragraphs 1.E.1 through 1.E.7 and any additional terms imposed by the copyright holder. Additional terms will be linked to the Project Gutenberg License for all works posted with the permission of the copyright holder found at the beginning of this work.

1.E.4. Do not unlink or detach or remove the full Project Gutenberg License terms from this work, or any files containing a part of this work or any other work associated with Project Gutenberg.

1.E.5. Do not copy, display, perform, distribute or redistribute this electronic work, or any part of this electronic work, without prominently displaying the sentence set forth in paragraph 1.E.1 with active links or immediate access to the full terms of the Project Gutenberg License.

1.E.6. You may convert to and distribute this work in any binary, compressed, marked up, nonproprietary or proprietary form, including any word processing or hypertext form. However, if you provide access to or distribute copies of a Project Gutenberg work in a format other than “Plain Vanilla ASCII” or other format used in the official version posted on the official Project Gutenberg website (www.gutenberg.org), you must, at no additional cost, fee or expense to the user, provide a copy, a means of exporting a copy, or a means of obtaining a copy upon request, of the work in its original “Plain Vanilla ASCII” or other form. Any alternate format must include the full Project Gutenberg License as specified in paragraph 1.E.1.

1.E.7. Do not charge a fee for access to, viewing, displaying, performing, copying or distributing any Project Gutenberg works unless you comply with paragraph 1.E.8 or 1.E.9.

1.E.8. You may charge a reasonable fee for copies of or providing access to or distributing Project Gutenberg electronic works provided that:

• You pay a royalty fee of 20% of the gross profits you derive from the use of Project Gutenberg works calculated using the method you already use to calculate your applicable taxes. The fee is owed to the owner of the Project Gutenberg trademark, but he has agreed to donate royalties under this paragraph to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation. Royalty payments must be paid within 60 days following each date on which you prepare (or are legally required to prepare) your periodic tax returns. Royalty payments should be clearly marked as such and sent to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation at the address specified in Section 4, “Information about donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation.”

• You provide a full refund of any money paid by a user who notifies you in writing (or by e-mail) within 30 days of receipt that s/he does not agree to the terms of the full Project Gutenberg™ License. You must require such a user to return or destroy all copies of the works possessed in a physical medium and discontinue all use of and all access to other copies of Project Gutenberg™ works.

• You provide, in accordance with paragraph 1.F.3, a full refund of any money paid for a work or a replacement copy, if a defect in the electronic work is discovered and reported to you within 90 days of receipt of the work.

• You comply with all other terms of this agreement for free distribution of Project Gutenberg™ works.

1.E.9. If you wish to charge a fee or distribute a Project Gutenberg™ electronic work or group of works on different terms than are set forth in this agreement, you must obtain permission in writing from the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, the manager of the Project Gutenberg™ trademark. Contact the Foundation as set forth in Section 3 below.

1.F.

1.F.1. Project Gutenberg volunteers and employees expend considerable effort to identify, do copyright research on, transcribe and proofread works not protected by U.S. copyright law in creating the Project Gutenberg™ collection. Despite these efforts, Project Gutenberg™ electronic works, and the medium on which they may be stored, may contain “Defects,” such as, but not limited to, incomplete, inaccurate or corrupt data, transcription errors, a copyright or other intellectual property infringement, a defective or damaged disk or other medium, a computer virus, or computer codes that damage or cannot be read by your equipment.

1.F.2. LIMITED WARRANTY, DISCLAIMER OF DAMAGES - Except for the “Right of Replacement or Refund” described in paragraph 1.F.3, the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, the owner of the Project Gutenberg™ trademark, and any other party distributing a Project Gutenberg™ electronic work under this agreement, disclaim all liability to you for damages, costs and expenses, including legal fees. YOU AGREE THAT YOU HAVE NO REMEDIES FOR NEGLIGENCE, STRICT LIABILITY, BREACH OF WARRANTY OR BREACH OF CONTRACT EXCEPT THOSE PROVIDED IN PARAGRAPH 1.F.3. YOU AGREE THAT THE FOUNDATION, THE

TRADEMARK OWNER, AND ANY DISTRIBUTOR UNDER THIS AGREEMENT WILL NOT BE

LIABLE TO YOU FOR ACTUAL, DIRECT, INDIRECT, CONSEQUENTIAL, PUNITIVE OR

INCIDENTAL DAMAGES EVEN IF YOU GIVE NOTICE OF THE POSSIBILITY OF SUCH DAMAGE.

1.F.3. LIMITED RIGHT OF REPLACEMENT OR REFUND - If you discover a defect in this electronic work within 90 days of receiving it, you can receive a refund of the money (if any) you paid for it by sending a written explanation to the person you received the work from. If you received the work on a physical medium, you must return the medium with your written explanation. The person or entity that provided you with the defective work may elect to provide a replacement copy in lieu of a refund. If you received the work electronically, the person or entity providing it to you may choose to give you a second opportunity to receive the work electronically in lieu of a refund. If the second copy is also defective, you may demand a refund in writing without further opportunities to fix the problem.

1.F.4. Except for the limited right of replacement or refund set forth in paragraph 1.F.3, this work is provided to you ‘AS-IS’, WITH NO OTHER WARRANTIES OF ANY KIND, EXPRESS OR IMPLIED, INCLUDING BUT NOT LIMITED TO WARRANTIES OF MERCHANTABILITY OR FITNESS FOR ANY PURPOSE.

1.F.5. Some states do not allow disclaimers of certain implied warranties or the exclusion or limitation of certain types of damages. If any disclaimer or limitation set forth in this agreement violates the law of the state applicable to this agreement, the agreement shall be interpreted to make the maximum disclaimer or limitation permitted by the applicable state law. The invalidity or unenforceability of any provision of this agreement shall not void the remaining provisions.

1.F.6. INDEMNITY - You agree to indemnify and hold the Foundation, the trademark owner, any agent or employee of the Foundation, anyone providing copies of Project Gutenberg™ electronic works in accordance with this agreement, and any volunteers associated with the production, promotion and distribution of Project Gutenberg™ electronic works, harmless from all liability, costs and expenses, including legal fees, that arise directly or indirectly from any of the following which you do or cause to occur: (a) distribution of this or any Project Gutenberg work, (b) alteration, modification, or additions or deletions to any Project Gutenberg work, and (c) any Defect you cause.

Section 2. Information about the Mission of Project Gutenberg

Project Gutenberg is synonymous with the free distribution of electronic works in formats readable by the widest variety of computers including obsolete, old, middle-aged and new computers. It exists because of the efforts of hundreds of volunteers and donations from people in all walks of life.

Volunteers and financial support to provide volunteers with the assistance they need are critical to reaching Project Gutenberg’s goals and ensuring that the Project Gutenberg collection will remain freely available for generations to come. In 2001, the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation was created to provide a secure and permanent future for Project Gutenberg and future generations. To learn more about the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation and how your efforts and donations can help, see Sections 3 and 4 and the Foundation information page at www.gutenberg.org.

Section 3. Information about the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation

The Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation is a non-profit 501(c)(3) educational corporation organized under the laws of the state of Mississippi and granted tax exempt status by the Internal Revenue Service. The Foundation's EIN or federal tax identification number is 64-6221541. Contributions to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation are tax deductible to the full extent permitted by U.S. federal laws and your state's laws.

The Foundation's business office is located at 41 Watchung Plaza #516, Montclair NJ 07042, USA, +1 (862) 621-9288. Email contact links and up to date contact information can be found at the Foundation's website and official page at www.gutenberg.org/contact

Section 4. Information about Donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation

Project Gutenberg™ depends upon and cannot survive without widespread public support and donations to carry out its mission of increasing the number of public domain and licensed works that can be freely distributed in machine-readable form accessible by the widest array of equipment including outdated equipment. Many small donations ($1 to $5,000) are particularly important to maintaining tax exempt status with the IRS.

The Foundation is committed to complying with the laws regulating charities and charitable donations in all 50 states of the United States. Compliance requirements are not uniform and it takes a considerable effort, much paperwork and many fees to meet and keep up with these requirements. We do not solicit donations in locations where we have not received written confirmation of compliance. To SEND DONATIONS or determine the status of compliance for any particular state visit www.gutenberg.org/donate

While we cannot and do not solicit contributions from states where we have not met the solicitation requirements, we know of no prohibition against accepting unsolicited donations from donors in such states who approach us with offers to donate.

International donations are gratefully accepted, but we cannot make any statements concerning tax treatment of donations received from outside the United States. U.S. laws alone swamp our small staff.

Please check the Project Gutenberg web pages for current donation methods and addresses. Donations are accepted in a number of other ways including checks, online payments and credit card donations. To donate, please visit: www.gutenberg.org/donate.

Section 5. General Information About Project Gutenberg electronic works

Professor Michael S. Hart was the originator of the Project Gutenberg concept of a library of electronic works that could be freely shared with anyone. For forty years, he produced and distributed Project Gutenberg eBooks with only a loose network of volunteer support.

Project Gutenberg eBooks are often created from several printed editions, all of which are confirmed as not protected by copyright in the U.S. unless a copyright notice is included. Thus, we do not necessarily keep eBooks in compliance with any particular paper edition.

Most people start at our website which has the main PG search facility:

www.gutenberg.org

This website includes information about Project Gutenberg, including how to make donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, how to help produce our new eBooks, and how to subscribe to our email newsletter to hear about new eBooks.
